First things first meaning example

(Definition of first things first from Cambridge Advanced Learner's Dictionary & Thesaurus © Cambridge University Press) I've gotten into the debate about which the use of apostrophe with the phrase first thing (a)s first is correct. My thinking is that one could take the first thing and give it priority, so the first thing is the first thing, and this thing is a contraction thing and is. Her thinking is that there may be several things that need to be done first, so the phrase should be the first things first. What is the correct idiom? The first thing, first, is a phrase that is often used in English. First, we will examine the meaning of the first thing in the phrase, the correct spelling, and some examples of its use in sentences. The first thing first is the phrase, which means that you should prioritize which items are most important, and deal with them before other, less important items. It is precisely which items can be considered the most important in any particular situation that can be interpreted. Usually, people use the term first things first when the most important need is obvious. The phrase first things were first used as the title of the best-selling book by Stephen Covey, a time management expert who built an empire teaching business people and others how to organize their lives. His first book had 7 habits of very effective people. Note that first there is no apostrophe expression in the first cases. Many mistakenly spell the word things with apostrophe as thing's. However, the word is neither a contraction nor a noun of belonging. The word things, in this case, are simply a plural noun, and do not require an apostrophe. Examples of first things first, it is always best to have the damage looked at by your health care professional immediately.
