Iran plans to deploy hundreds of advanced uranium enrichment centrifuges to an underground plant in violation of deals with major powers, a U.N. nuclear watchdog report showed Friday, a move that will increase pressure on U.S. President-elect Joe Biden. President Trump reportedly doesn't need encouragement to start praising the dangerous, baseless QAnon conspiracy theory. The most pressing issue for federal Republicans right now is the upcoming Senate runoffs in Georgia, which will determine control of the organization. But in a meeting with advisers and top Senate Republicans on this matter, Trump completely derailed the conversation by bringing up QAnon, people familiar with the debate to tell The Washington Post.Trump reportedly didn't get impressed with Georgia and the fact that he overturned President-elect Joe Biden and publicly upset the Republican leaders of the state who somehow didn't overturn the election for him. Despite Republican advisers' view of Trump's help as key key in january's election, his tough supporters voted for Kelly Loeffler and David Perdue in the January election, and the president is not happy about it, writes the Post. Advisers say he was frustrated that some Republican senators criticized him, which made Trump seem uninterested when discussing Senate campaign plans, the Post continues. That was clear from a recent meeting with Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.), Sen. Todd C. Young (R-Ind.), and other aides. As they talked about Georgia's Senate races, Trump brought up the QAnon-supporting, soon-to-be member of Congress, Marjorie Taylor Greene. Trump mistakenly called the group's name Q-an-uhn and then said that supporters of the cannibalistic, pedophile conspiracy theory that spread Democrats fundamentally believe in good governance, people say familiarly to the Post. Trump has been repeatedly asked to condemn Qanon, but generally prefers to tacitly endorse the theory. More stories theweek.com Trump is not politics. It's something much worse. China conducts human testing to bio- The head of U.S. intelligence has claimed that Beijing poses the greatest threat to America's national security. In an op-ed in the Wall Street Journal, John Ratcliffe, the director of national intelligence, warned that the U.S. should prepare for an open-ended confrontation with China, which he likened to the Cold War. He claimed that U.S. intelligence showed that China had conducted human experiments on members of the People's Liberation Army in the hope of developing soldiers with biologically enhanced capabilities. There are no ethical boundaries to Beijing's pursuit of power, he said. Mr Ratcliffe said his unique view of the current security threats to the US led him to conclude that the People's Republic of China represents the greatest threat to America today and the greatest threat to democracy and freedom worldwide since World War II. He then detailed China's economic espionage strategy, which he outlined as follows: rob, copy and replace. China will deprive U.S. companies of intellectual property, repeat the technology and then replace U.S. firms in the global market, he said. WashingtonMichel Barnier is used to being universally praised for preaching the gospel against Brexit on his regular trips to EU capitals. On Tuesday, as the EU's chief negotiator, he was in a position to come under friendly fire for the first time in three years. It was an uncomfortable moment for Mr Barnier, who was at the Hotel Conrad in Westminster and who was embroiled in intense Brexit negotiations with his British counterpart David Frost. It is expected that the trade deal with Britain will be close and avoid a damaging no deal. Mr Barnier had in his grasp the worthy legacy of a politician who devoted decades of EU service.
