The Collin County Animal Shelter is still at max capacity after lowering adoption costs. Collin County Animal Shelter Collin County Animal Shelter Despite what Collin County Animal Services calls a successful initiative to encourage more animal adoptions, it is still at maximum capacity. Just a few weeks ago, the shelter was at 125% capacity, and the halls were lined with overflow kennels. The shelter reduced adoption costs from $25 to $10 from May 28-31 to encourage more people to adopt. During that period, 37 dogs and cats were adopted. Temporarily lowering adoption fees helped clear some space and has kept animals out of the hallways, but overcrowding is still an issue, said Danny Davis, the supervisor for Collin County Animal Services. As of 10 June, the shelter still has 76 dogs and 26 cats that need houses. Collin County Animal Services is not a no-kill shelter; however, the shelter has not had to euthanize animals for space in three years, Davis said. Davis said that every time the shelter reaches 100% capacity, they are in danger of being euthanized. Overcrowding wouldn't be a problem if more people sterilized and neutered their animals, Davis said. He also encourages people to adopt from shelters and not to shop with breeders.
