This human resources specialist plays an important role in coordinating school staffing needs, employee needs, and the will of administrators. He conducts this juggling act while keeping the school district in accordance with state and federal employment laws and regulations. The human resources specialist is heavily involved in the daily staff of the school system. She makes sure that the right people are hired for schoolwork and that the staff is functional. Some of the tasks you might be responsible for include hiring staff, recommending hires, maintaining jobs, determining wage ranks, managing job tests, monitoring staff procedures, developing operating schedules, prioritizing, and assisting other administrative staff with personnel issues. The human resources specialist generally serves as a liaison between teachers, staff, and school administrators. You can also deal with teacher trade unions and bargaining agreements. To support school employees, you can communicate information about industrial relations or interpret employment laws. In addition, you can organize new employee guidance, coordinate training, conduct professional development workshops, provide information about employee benefits and activities, verify employment, and assist employees with employment-related documentation. The human resources specialist works closely with school administration. In some school systems, the specialist may report directly to an administrator. Similar to what you do for employees, interpret contract information, policies, procedures, state and federal regulations, and compliance information for administrators. In addition, you may be involved with several committees and provide recommendations based on your area of expertise. Some human resources specialists may attend school board meetings and meet regularly with school board members. The human resources department is responsible for collecting and maintaining everything employment records. The human resources specialist may be in charge of updating and maintaining these files and creating reports. You can collect and present information in each employee's file. When you attend school meetings, it may take minutes to keep track of changes or updates that affect employment. When someone in the workplace is affected by cancer, it can be difficult for everyone.
