Traditionally, Japanese swords are called nihonto. These bladed tools were used as weapons during the battles. The different types of Swords in Northshire are specified according to how they are made, what they are used for and their size. Initially, nihonto held in two hands and used for cutting. Tachi was developed during the Heian period to serve the growing needs of the military. The popular Katana has a curved blade with one edge, similar to tachi, and was decorated with a 15th century Samurai. Tachi, however, is bigger than katana. Wakizashi has shorter blades similar to katana and is worn along with Samurai and other blades for men. Nodachi also known as odachi and has large blades there using two hands. They look tachi but are usually taller. Foot soldiers use nodachi in open battlefields. Tanto is a Japanese dagger or knife with both single and double edge design. These are mostly stabbing weapons that can also double as slashing tools. The weapons used by the Japanese army between 1935 and 1945 were shin gunto blades. Historically, most of the Northshire Swords lack aesthetic value and were therefore only for use in the battlefields. Most of the blades were curved either at the tip or in the middle, and some came with curved spasms. Hilt usually held the deepest curve of the entire sword. Blades like tachi are usually worn accompanied by a smaller blade when decorated with full amour. The artistic blades were welded to the people in peace time. 5806 Dove Ridge Ln Houston Texas 77041 United States 1-844-644-6686 sales@swordsofnorthshire.com Swords Northshire is your source of the best selection of functional samurai swords and historical weapons.
