Pokemon ash gray pokemon list

Comment Share Pokémon FireRed/LeafGreen Pokémon Ash Gray is a Rom-hack of FireRed by Metapod23. Story Pokémon Ash Gray follows the events of Season 1 of the Pokémon anime. Trivia Although following the anime, players can catch Pokémon that Ash never captured, such as Spearow that attackEd Ash and Pikachu in the first episode Also don't have to release your Butterfree like Ash did in anime (and movies) For unknown reasons, bad eggs can appear in the safe deposit box. Another mistake occurs when replacing Pokémon during the first battle with Jessie and James, your other Pokémon become invisible. This may be due to the fact that in the anime, Pikachu was the only Pokémon Ash at the time The game featured content from banned episodes of anime such as Beauty and the Beach, Legend of Dratini (which is banned in America), and Electric Soldier Porygon Holiday Hi-Jynx side stories available after Porygon missions. as it should be in running the original screenshot of the anime Pokémon Add photos to this gallery Community content is available under CC-BY-SA unless otherwise stated. Through nearly 1,000 television episodes and 20 spin-off films, Ash Ketchum has become an iconic figure for aspiring Pokémon trainers around the world. An immortal 10-year-old from Pallet City in the Kanto region, Ash has seen his dream of catching them all shattered to pieces, as the original Pokémon 151 grows to over 800. Even so, Ash has built a solid team on his way through seven areas, allowing him to argue with some of the best (as no one has ever had?). As we narrowed his most powerful team to 15, we focused specifically on the battle record and caliber of opponents they had defeated, with little emphasis on moving sets. Given the number of inconsistencies in anime compared to games, there is only so much factual evidence we can provide, and as always, we welcome your own thoughts on Ash's strongest team in the comments. It is also impossible to know how powerful the Various Pokémon Ash have been released prematurely, so while the like of Primeape, Tauros, and Pidgeot will usually be competitors, we haven't seen them at their full potential. Let's take a look at Ash's Most Powerful Pokémon. 15 Bulbasaur Back in Kanto, Bulbasaur is only the fourth Pokémon to join the Ash team (behind Pikachu, Caterpie, and Pidgeotto). Only Pikachu and Meowth have made more anime appearances than Bulbasaur, while Pikachu is the only one on Ash's team for more episodes. Despite going up against some strong opponents during his time with Ash, Bulbasaur holds a positive win-to-lose ratio. The most impressive actually came when fighting for Misty in the Women's Day Festival, where she defeated Kingler, Pinsir, Cubone, and Raticate in one battle. In Johto, Johto, relationship with the last evolution equivalent of gen-2, Meganium, after taking the damage from Magnetron, and returning for the Next Generation series to defeat Brandon's Dusclops, who had just defeated Charizard. Bulbasaur now lives in Professor Oak's Lab, where he maintains peace between Ash grass and water-type Pokémon. In Sinnoh's only appearance, Bulbasaur is seen fending off Heracross, who tries to suck the sap out of his bulb, and returns briefly to Ash's side in unova territory. 14 Gliscor Ash's Gliscor didn't last too long after progressing from Gligar, but his first battle won the Ash a Badge at Canalave City Gym. After defeating Bastiodon, Gliscor then lost the next two games, although his defeats to Candice's Snover and Paul's Torterra were narrow. After training with McCann, Gliscor returned to the much more powerful Ash Pokémon, having learned to perfect Giga Impact and Stone Edge under the supervision of Air Battle Master. Ash recalled Gliscor for the Sinnoh league, where a ground-flying hybrid got a chance to show off his new powers during a rematch with Paul. Gliscor battled through the poison to defeat Drapion, who had knocked out three Pokémon Of Ash in a row, but eventually lost to the overpowering Elektivire Paul. This is the last time we saw Gliscor in action, despite being seen at Professor Oak's in the final episode of the Black and White saga. 13

Kingler Krabby was the seventh Pokémon captured by Ash, and the first type of water to evolve under Ash's care (a record he held himself until Kalos, when Ash's Froakie swept through the evolutionary process to become Greninja). We also didn't see much Kingler in the anime, but it gathered some impressive statistics during his brief spell as part of the Ash team. After progressing midway through the fight, Kingler lost only one competitive game, and it remained the only Pokémon Ash to win a league game entirely alone. It entered the Pokémon League as Krabby, and despite its unfortunate kind, Krabby surprised everyone by defeating an Exeggutor in his first battle. It evolved then and there, and Kingler made quick work of Mandi Seadra and Golbat to sweep the boards. In the next match, Kingler defeated Cloyster by smashing his shell with a powerful Crabhammer, before eventually falling to Arcanine Pete. 12 Staraptor Wherever he goes, you can usually count on Ash to pick up regional bird pokémon. Pidgeot never entered an official match (despite tearing Fearow wild with ease); Noctowl, despite his winning record, is rarely used in combat; and Unfezant and Talonflame have record under Ash. That leaves Swellow and Staraptor fighting for the number one spot. Starly was the first Pokémon captured by Ash in Sinnoh, and when it evolved into Staraptor, it became Ash Ash's longest serving outside hoenn territory. Despite Swellow's impressive record in combat, Staraptor has some equally impressive victories to his name, including the one over Paul's Honchkrow and Weavile (the latter with a type loss), but his step set so far is the best of the Ash Bird Pokémon. Staraptor knows two of the most powerful flying type movements, Aerial Ace and Brave Bird, as well as Close Combat, which allows it to fight the types of ice, rock, and steel where it would normally have losses. 11 Swellow But Swellow still takes the top spot over Staraptor. Third only to Pikachu and Bulbasaur in terms of episodes spent for the Ash team, it may not have the best movement of the Ash birds, but Swellow is almost entirely responsible for taking Ash to the quarter-finals of the Hoenn League. It also put in a strong performance in Battle Frontier, where it defeated Tucker's Swampert and Palace's Venasaur. At the Ever Grande Conference in the Hoenn region, Swellow twice defeated two Pokémon in a row. First, defeat Katie's Venomoth and Scizor, before fighting Tyson, defeating Hariyama and Donphan. In the latter, he even did damage to Metagross, which would eventually allow Pikachu to win over this type of steel. This comes after separate gym battle victories over Juan's Whiscash and the more powerful Shiny Swellow. Swellow's unique resistance to electrical movement sets it apart from other types of Ash flying. In a double battle with Pikachu, Swellow not only took the Pikachu Thunder, but used it as armor, transformed into an electrically charged version of itself and crippled Lunatone with one Thunder Armor Aerial Ace. 10 Glalie Glalie came under the radar as part of Ash's Hoenn team, but it's worth noting that Glalie is currently the only Pokémon type of Ash ice (after releasing Lapras in the Orange Islands), and his record in combat speaks for itself. Having progressed from a nervous Snorunt, Glalie never lost a one-on-one match (despite being forced into a draw on more than one occasion). Glalie's first win will come in the Ever Grande Conference, beating Charizard despite the loss. In the following battle with Katie, Glalie pulls out her Dugtrio with ease, and then uses headbutt to apparently paralyze Misdreavus, only for the ghostly type to use Destiny Bond at the last second to knock Glalie down with it. Glalie is Ash's last Pokémon in his fight with Morrison, defeating Metang even after taking some super effective hits of steel type. Glalie's Ice Beam matched Sceptile's Solar Beam in the next round against Tyson, and the resulting explosion knocked out both Pokémon. 9 Heracross was the first of the Ash Johto Pokémon, but competed in some surprising battles in its initial run. It lost to Donphan Rochelle in his first official match, although it had previously been easy His other donphan before the game was interrupted. The following match was probably Heracross's best moment, defeating Shingo's Scizor with a powerful combination of sharp reaction time and a strong set of movements. Heracross has been in and out of the Ash team ever since, spending most of his time at Oak's Lab trying to suck the sap out of Bulbasaur, and returning only when Ash has a tough battle ahead. Heracross was recalled for the Johto League Silver Conference, where he went up against Gary Magmar, overcoming a super effective combination of Fire Blast and Flamethrower with his wing flush. Later, at the Lily of the Valley Conference, Heracross rejoined Ash to fight Tobias. Facing his Darkrai, Heracross handles the legendary Pokémon with powerful punches with his Megahorn, even after being put to sleep, and his Hyper Beam is perfect for Darkrai's Ice Beam before being taken out by Dream Eater. 8 Goodra Goodra is the third stage evolution of Goomy, the only Pokémon type of pure dragon Ash, and one of only eight Pokémon that are legendary pseudo (meaning Pokémon in the third and final stage of evolution whose total stat is basically exactly 600). Prior to its release, Goodra was undefeated in any form of combat. In his first two official matches as Goodra, it dropped double threats from Raichu and Wartortle Tierno (along with Pikachu), and earned the Ash a Voltage Badge by defeating Luxray Clemont in the final round. Upon his return to the team, Goodra fought Slurpuff Sawyer with a draw, and followed it up with consecutive defeats to Bisharp Alain and Mega Gyarados Lysandre, despite a series of strong moves. Goodra's powerful bide is backed by attacks such as Dragon Pulse, Dragon Breath, and Ice Beam, but only misses Ash's final team. Had Goodra maintained his winning record, there would have been no doubt of his place in the top six. 7 Krookodile Krookodile is the ninth and last Pokémon to join ash di Unova's team, and is by far the most powerful of the lot. Unfortunately, Unova Ash's team is so big that none of them get a chance to fully develop. Krookodile is actually more to do when it is still krokorok. That said, Krookodile has one of the highest winning rates of all Pokémon Ash at 75%, and his winning ways are just as impressive. Krookodile's first victim was Iris' Dragonite (who admittedly did not notice Iris through most of the rounds). Krookodile's next match was at the Vertress Conference, where he was sent out first to fight Stephan's Liepard. Krookodile was recalled after his victory, returned for the final match with Sawk, and defeated Pokémon who fought an Aerial Ace attack The flying-type movement stands alongside Dig, Dragon Claw, and Stone Edge in what is arguably the most powerful set of movements of all Pokémon Ash. It's just that shame we couldn't see more Krookodile in action. 6 Pikachu Pikachu had to make the top six ash, only on the basis that Ash would never leave Pikachu out of his dream team. But that's not to say that Pikachu didn't get his place; even since the first episode of the anime, Pikachu still holds a winning rate of more than 60%. That 60% includes victories over three pseudo legendary Pokemon. Pikachu defeated the heavily worn Dragonite in the Orange League, and Metagross and Tyranitar fell to Pikachu during Ash's defeat to Alain at the Lumiose Conference in Kalos. Pikachu even boasts a full winning record versus the legendary Pokémon, having defeated Brandon's Regice and tied with Latios Tobias - not to mention his victory over Mega Lucario, which may also be legendary. On the other hand, Pikachu has been on the receiving end of some equally surprising losses. Among other things, Pikachu was defeated by Snivy Trip, although Snivy had never fought before, as well as Jeanette's Bellsprout. His inconsistencies only kept Pikachu out of the top five, but Pikachu is most definitely at the highest level of one of Ash's Pokémon, and will always make his team of six. 5 Sceptile When it comes to the legendary Pokémon, Ash's Sceptile is arguably the most prominent win in the entire anime, taking on Tobias' Darkrai at the Lily of the Valley Conference. Darkrai has never been defeated in battle, where Sceptile was able to get it out with one Leaf Blade, although some credits had to go to Heracross, after scoring some damage to Darkrai. Sceptile's record against other legends, including Regirock and Latios, is not so good, but you can barely count it against Sceptile, who has also fought Blaziken May for the series. Now having access to Mega Evolution, Sceptile has the potential to stake a claim as the most powerful Pokémon ash, but his current winning rate of just 44% through three stages of evolution proves that Ash has not been able to rely on Sceptile as much as some other Pokémon. Unlike the one above Sceptile, it just hasn't garnered enough wins in a row to be considered for the top spot. 4 Snorlax Snorlax may never beat the legendary, but there is no reason that it cannot. Snorlax has overcome almost impossible odds to win most of his matches, despite being reserved specifically for the most intense Ashes battles. His most impressive achievement was showing six moves during Ash's match with Greta in Kanto Battle Frontier. While Ash's Pokémon are often inconsistent with their set of moves, none feature more than four separate attacks in the same battle. In contrast, 5000 IQ only able to stretch up to five movements. Oversight or not, when we combine the Snorlax step set with its extraordinary agility (for Snorlax), and a record of 100% 100% Pokémon fighting type (supposedly the single weakness of the normal type), it is understandable that many consider Snorlax to be the most powerful Pokémon in Ash. The only defeats came to Clair's Gyarados, Gary's Scizor, and Harrison's Houndoom, but in all three matches, Snorlax had already beaten at least one of his opponent's Pokémon. 3 Charizard Ash's relationship with Charizard got off to a rocky start, but wins over Blaine Magmar and Poliwrath Tad put the pair back on track. Since then, Charizard has faced a much stronger opponent, and came out with a winning record. His most famous victory was his defeat of Articuno Noland at battle factory, while also holding back against Entei in the third Pokémon film. In addition to the legendary Pokémon, Charizard had an equally impressive victory over Pidgeot Falkner and half of Gary Oak's entire team in the Silver Conference. Charizard swept Gary's Scizor, Golem, and Blastoise, though his kind was less favorable in the last two, to earn Ash his first victory over his childhood rival. And this was all before his training in the Charicific Valley, which was recently confirmed to be complete. Charizard's only battle on his return saw Pokémon take the top flight against Iris' Dragonite, before the match was called off. Charizard has losses on Blaziken and Dusclops to his name, but most of his loss percentage is due to Ash's initial noncompliance, and with his training now complete, charizard at full strength is a match for almost any Pokémon. 2 Infernape Since evolving from Monferno, Ash's Infernape has only lost once, and that's for members of the Elite Four Flint. In other battles - in battles it is expected to win and on them seemingly losing - the Infernape always succeeds, and currently holds a winning rate of 83% below Ash - the highest of its Pokémon. Not even including his physical strength, The Infernape's bond with Ash is so strong that between them, they are able to control blaze infernape abilities. With Blaze activated, the Infernape was virtually invincible, even after picking up heavy damage. Infernape won the Ash the Beacon Badge, defeated Volkner's Jolteon and Luxray after taking a strong electric strike from both, and one-on-one ran through Paul's team in the Lily of the Valley Conference. After battling through poison to defeat Aggron and Ninjask, Infernape finally settles the score with Electivire, activating blaze and eventually defeating his old rival. The infernape has a higher winning percentage than Charizard, and a series of superior moves. The only drawback of the Infernape is that it never defeats the legendary Pokémon, with Blaze, we'll rely on the Infernape to defeat anything. 1 Greninja None of Ash's Pokémon has been, yet, Mega Evolved, but Greninja has come the closest. In fact, Greninja does not require stone to reach the most powerful stage - only its bond with Ash. The resulting form, known as Ash-Greninja, mentally unites Ash and Greninja, and is as powerful as the Pokémon Mega Evolved seen in the anime, even through Ash's struggle to master the transformation. Evolution, which has not been seen in thousands of years, has been against Mega Charizard X Alain, Mega Abomasnow Wulfric, and Mega Gardevoir Diantha. Greninja won the last two matches and initially lost to Charizard, only for the rematch to be cut short by Ash's inability to maintain the pressure of Ash-Greninja's form. At exactly 80%, his winning rate dropped only short of the Infernape, while it also hasn't tested his strength against the legendary Pokémon, but Greninja's bond with Ash even exceeds his relationship with Infernape, which almost guarantees Greninja a first name in Ash's first team. --- Which of Ash's Pokémon do you think is the most powerful?
