The Houston County Centerville Library is a distinctive building located in Centerville, Georgia. This 15,000-square-foot building, with its traditional architecture, is an asset to the Houston County Library Council and improves the lives of patrons and the community in which it is located. Located on a beautifully landscaped site at the main intersection, it is one of the central points in the area. This building is built using a concrete foundation, wooden frame walls integrated into the structural steel frame and pre-designed wooden roof trusses. Outside the building there is a brick veneer with cement stucco accents. In addition, it contains a roof, which is a combination of the architectural style of shingles and the standing seam of the architectural roof system. Outside the building there are also round columns that support the front entrance of the structure. Upon entering the object, you will immediately notice the quality of the structure. The lobby features ceramic tiled floors, heavy architectural slats and high painted ceilings. There is also a large conference room, a circuit area with a desk, a children's library with a storytelling area and a main library space. In addition to these spaces there is also space for nonfiction books and fiction, as well as magazines, young adults and other areas for reading. This property also includes all necessary support administrative areas, data room/telephones, men's and women's toilets, storage closets and additional upstairs space in the filled attic. In addition to the modernized architectural features, the property includes a fully automated drying system, state-of-the-art technology, audio-video areas and internet access.
