Njdep well search questionnaire

If you are well on your property and is the main source of water for your home, you will need to know about NJ monitoring as well as permits along with other information to ensure that your well meets the required standards for the state of New Jersey. You will also need to know this information if you are going to move into a home that has done well. NJDEP One of the first agencies that you will need to know is the NJDEP (New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection), specifically the agency's Department of Water Supply and Geosciences. Each year, about 20,000 new drilling permits for drilling wells are tracked and issued in the state of New Jersey. If you are planning to build wells, keep in mind that once it is well built, you will need to submit a record that describes well. With over 400 licensed pump plumbers and 800 professionals who are licensed to build wells in New Jersey, it is extremely important you find the right construction professional. Abandoned Well If you are moving into a home that has abandoned wells, you will need to contact the state to see if there has been an abandonment of the well report. This allows you to know if the area is safe or if you need to have a property checked for dangerous chemicals. If there is a town hall meeting regarding your property or surrounding areas and wells on these properties, please note that the meetings are open to the public, which means that you can sit in control. The NJDEP search questionnaire offers NJ monitoring as well as search permits so you can ensure the wells on your property or potential property have been documented by the state and been declared nonhazardous. You will need to fill out nj monitoring as well as a search questionnaire, reveal the reason for your search and let NJDEP know what you will use well. The search will provide you with information about how long the wells have been abandoned, when they were installed, and how long they have been in use. If you decide that you no longer want to use wells, you will also need to provide this information, so it is possible to document that the wells will be decommissioned. It may also be necessary for an NJDEP representative to inspect the wells to determine whether it is suitable for future use. No permit application Finally, if you are planning to use as well as your water supply, you will need to complete both NJ monitoring and permit application. If you decide to use the wells for a longer period of time than originally anticipated, you will need to apply for an extension. Want more information and help? Experts on all the U.S. environment can help you with any questions you may have regarding both NJ monitoring and permits. We can also assess your property for you, check for possible contamination, and provide solutions to improve the area so you can healthily and use wells. Well Permits & Information Approximately 20,000 new drilling permits in New Jersey are issued and monitored annually. Once well built, the drill is required to present a well record document that is a like-built description of the well. No drills also present a good exit message whenever a well has been decommissioned. There are about 800 licensed well drillers and 400 licensed pump installers in New Jersey; only duly licensed persons may install, operate and decommission wells and pumps. The Submersion and Water Leak Act provides for state wells drillers and pump installers examination and advisory committee, whose members provide advice to the department on exam issues, licensing status and technical issues. All board meetings shall be open to the public. Online Reports (Wells, Licensed Drills, Drilling Companies) Well search testing information can be found on our Residential Wells page.
