Home Tools, Gear & EquipmentThe Home Depot offers a wealth of materials, resources and a customer-friendly return policy. But there are a few shopping secrets there that only the most savvy DIYers know. Here are 14 of the best tips and tricks to help you get the most out of your trips to home depot. 1/14 Belen Strehl/ShutterstockMost retailers use a range of codes and special prices to secretly label their products. Sales associates use them to sort and move merchandise, but smart shoppers who have broken the code can grab items when they're at the lowest point of their price. In the case of Home Depot, look for yellow sales labels. If the sales price ends at 0.06, then six weeks remain before the price of this item is lower. If the sale price ends at 0.03, then this item will either be moved to liquidation or donated to charity in three weeks. By tracking these yellow labels, it's possible to get even better deals on low-cost, high-value items that every DIYer will love. 2/14 Helen89/Shutterstock Once these sales figures go into liquidation, you may think the price is as low as it's going to get. But there's really a chance to get them for even less. The pricing of the clearing rack is at the discretion of the store manager. But it never hurts to ask if the price can drop a little. This is especially useful if you are buying several clearing items at the same time. It may tell you no, but you will be surprised at how often administrators are happy to see these items sell at all. If you are unsure of your negotiating skills, this article about finding the right car price is a great primer. Check out these 14 unique uses for free stuff from Home Depot. 4/14 igor kisselv/ShutterstockA price saving tip that requires no trading at all is 110 percent price guarantee of Home Depot. If you bring in an advertised price from one of their competitors, the sales staff at The Home Depot won't just match the price, they'll beat it by 10 percent. So keep an eye peeled for coupons and online sales. Bring this information to the store, and you'll get a healthy discount, no matter how weird a thing you buy. 5/ 14 CURAphotography/Shutterstock Many DIYers know that home depot will cut timber and cut into custom length. Even better, when these items are sold by foot board, you only have to pay for what you need. what you may not know is that all this excess timber and off-cut finishes ends up as hard to sell wood scraps. Ask a partner about the Slaughter Timber or Scrap Wood shelf, and you'll find wood selling for up to 75 percent off. If you need specific dimensions, you can't find what you're looking for in the slaughter timber bin, but you can discover enough materials to help you do something big. As a single example, check out this shelf made entirely of scrap wood! 6 / 14 14 Duda/Shutterstock Customers Often Ask: Can You Return Color to Home Depot? The paint sections of the custom-tinted home depot thousands of gallons of paint each week. Given this volume, it is not surprising that some of them do not come out perfectly, or are never received by the customer who requested it. Look for a shelf of mis-hue or oops color for color that is priced so low it's almost free. Like wood located among slaughter timber, you can't find the color or quantity you would like, but there is often enough paint at a great price for painting doors or other small projects. 7/14 Helen89/Shutterstock Many of the items sold at The Home Depot come in heavy boxes and packaging material. If this outer packaging is torn or crushed the product becomes difficult to sell, even though the damage can only surface deep. But while the item itself may be intact, the damaged package means the retailer will probably be forced to place it at deep discount. Look for damaged packaging. If there isn't already a bright yellow selling sticker, ask a partner if they can give you a price discount. And if you had any doubts about buying damaged goods, here's a great explanation for how these perfectly usable goods can help you do more while staying under budget. 8/14 Casimiro PT/Shutterstock There is nothing more aggravating that finding that tool or hardware you need, then buying it and heading home just to see it go on sale the next time you visit the store. If this happens to you with a purchase from Home Depot, don't just grit your teeth and regret your purchase – head inside the store to demand your savings! This applies to anything you have purchased in the last 30 days. Bring the receipt for your purchase and show it to customer service. Your wallet will please you. Be sure to keep an eye on sales events, especially around the holidays, and you can make recent purchases even better priced. 9/14 Iokov Filimonov/Shutterstock Not sure what kind of garden loppers to buy? Take both, and bring back what you don't use for a full refund. This is also a great strategy you need to get to the store and realize that you forgot to take a measurement for a particular place. Buy many sizes and plan the return of unused items. Bring a receipt if you have it, but even without one you can still do the with a photo ID. Knowing that these returns are possible, you can simply get a variety of sizes and colors of a given material, which is sure to help you move quickly on your next trip to The Home Depot! 10/14 michaeljung/Shutterstock At Home Depot you can actually return a dead plant! Garden sales of home depot come with a one-year warranty. This means that if your tree or plant dies despite proper care, you can return it for a full return, even after you have planted it. This warranty is great for those diyers who confident in their plant cultivation skills. 11/14 Christian Delbert/Shutterstock Chances is you've seen the huge stacks of timber at The Home Depot, especially of the common dimension such as 2x4s or 2x8s. If you're itching to start a project, you may be tempted to simply load up your basket and head for check-out. But take the time to look at every piece of timber as you choose it. You will notice that many are warped, cupped, checked or otherwise damaged. Sure, you can always return bad tables, but why go through the trouble of hauling them out to your jobsite and back again? If you're not sure what to look for, check out this guide for an in-depth explanation of how to choose the best pieces in a lumberyard. Another question that customers often ask is home depot cut wood? The answer is usually yes! If you need help cutting timber before taking home, ask a partner for help. 12/ 14 QualityHD/Shutterstock The corridors of Home Depot are filled with tools of all sizes and prices. Each one is new, never used. But there is another place in the store that has an even better deal for the tools: the rental shop. Rental tools are available in DIYers of all skill levels to try or use for one-off projects. As various tools begin to get scratches and dings or be replaced by a newer model, they are put up for sale – usually at a great discount. But unlike the used tools found in pawnshops, they have been inspected by a qualified technician among the tenants. Of course, you can always simply rent tools to make money, but keep an eye on your local home depot rental stock for purchase opportunities as well. 13/14 Roman Tiraspol'sky/Shutterstock Like many retailers, the Home Depot times clearance sales around big holidays such as Memorial Day and the Fourth of July. You can pick up the color for significantly less, or bring the receipt from a recent purchase for a price match. And the higher volume of purchases during holiday sales means a larger number of bargain-basement mis-shades. These holiday sales are a win all the way around! If you choose a lot of color during these sales, here are some great tips for storing all those new and half-used paint pots. 14/14 Rob Wilson/Shutterstock Anyone who treats projects as easily as most DIYers can access great deals and sales associates who are motivated to help you. pro office offers some services that are useful only for commercial organizations, but anyone who buys in bulk will also benefit.
