State capitals that start with o

From Ballotpedia State capitals are home to the offices and meeting places of state governments. The word capital is derived from the Latin caput, which means head. In the United States, the related concept of capitals were established by 1910. [1] [2] Most states have moved their capital at least once. [3] States chose their capitals for a variety of reasons, including: the presence of a large population; a desire to drive settlement and economic growth to an area; historical significance, such as the first area settled; or perceived security from historical military threats. The U.S. Virgin Islands VI 1917 Charlotte Amalie 18 481 Former national capitals Two of the 50 US states, Hawaii and Texas, were once the jure sovereign nation (Kingdom of Hawaii, 1795–1893; The Republic of Hawaii, 1894– 1898), were five places the capital of Hawaii: Waikīkī, 1795–1796 Hilo, 1796–1803 Honolulu, 1803–1812 Kailua-Kona, 1812–1820 Lahaina, 1820–1845 Honolulu remained the capital, the first of the territory of Hawaii (1900–1959), and then by the state (since 1959). Texas During its history as a sovereign nation (Republic of Texas, 1836–1845), seven places As the capital of Texas: Washington-on-the-Brazos), 1836 Houston, 1837–1839 Austin, 1839–1845 Annexed by the United States in 1845, Austin is still the capital of Texas. Native American capitals Some Native American tribes, especially the five civilized tribes, organized their states with constitutions and Western-style capitals. Others, like Iroquois, had long-standing, pre-Colombian traditions of a capitol longhouse where wampum and council fires were maintained with special status. Since they did business with the U.S. federal government, these capitals can be seen as officially recognized in some way. The Cherokee Nation New Echota, now near Calhoun, Georgia, was founded in 1825 and realized the dream and plans of cherokee Chief Major Ridge. Major Ridge chose the site because of its centrality in the historic Cherokee Nation that stretched across parts of Georgia, North Carolina, Tennessee and Alabama, and because it was close to the confluence between the Conasauga and Coosawattee rivers. The city's layout was partly inspired by Ridge's many visits to Washington, D.C. and to Baltimore, but also invoked traditional themes in the southeastern ceremonial complex. Complete with Council House, The Supreme Court, Cherokee Spelling Printing Press, and the houses of several of the country's constitutional officers. New Echota served as the capital until 1832 when the state of Georgia banned the Indian Congregation in an effort to undermine the nation. Thousands of Cherokee would gather in New Echota for the annual National Councils, camping along the nearby rivers and holding long stomp dances in the park-like forest typical of many southeastern Indian settlements. [19] Red Clay 1832–1838 Cherokee National Council area was moved to Red Clay, Tennessee, on georgia's state line, to avoid Georgian state militias. The log cabins, limestone springs and park-like forests of Red Clay served as the capital of the Cherokee Nation being removed to the Indian Territory (Oklahoma) on the Trail of Tears. [19] Tahlequah 1839–1907, 1938–present Tahlequah, in modern-day Oklahoma, served as the capital of the original Cherokee Nation after removal. After the Civil War, a turbulent period for the nation that was involved in its own civil war as a result of pervasive anger and disagreements over its removal from Georgia, the Cherokee Nation built a new National Capitol in Tahlequah out of bricks. The building served as the capital until 1907, when the Dawes Act finally disbanded the Cherokee Nation and Tahlequah became the county, Oklahoma. The Cherokee Nation and Tahlequah became the county, of the United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians, Cherokee 20th century-present (Eastern Band of Cherokee) About four to eight hundred Cherokees escaped removal because they lived on a separate treaty, purchased later with the help of Confederate Colonel William Holland Thomas, along the Oconaluftee deep in the Smoky Mountains of North Carolina, Some Cherokees fled the federal army, sent for round up, fled to the remote settlements separated from the rest of the Cherokee Territory in Georgia and North Carolina, to remain in their homeland. [20] In the 20th century, their descendants organized themselves as the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians; The capital is located in Cherokee, North Carolina, in the tribally-controlled Qualla Boundary, Muscogee Creek Nation Hot Springs, Arkansas c. 1837–1866 After removal from its native Alabama-Georgia, Creek's national government met near Hot Springs, which was then part of their new territory as prescribed in the Treaty of Cusseta. The union, however, forced the Creeks to abandon over 1,000,000 acres (1,200,000 acres) of what is now Arkansas, after some streams fought with the Confederacy in the American Civil War. Coosa and later Creek town built with mounds and serves as part of the southeastern ceremonial complex. However, there were other traditional Creek mother towns before removal. The Ocmulgee mounds were decircled illegally in 1821 with the Treaty of Indian Sources. Iroquois Confederacy Onondaga (Onondaga privilege c. 1450– present) Iroguois Confederacy or Haudenosaunee, meaning The People of Longhouse, was an alliance between the five and later Six Nations of the Iroguoian language and culture of the state of New York. These include Seneca, Cayuga, Oneida, Mohawk, and after 1722, Tuscarora Nations. Since the formation of the Confederacy around 1450, the Onondaga nation has had the privilege of hosting the Iroquois Grand Council and the status of Keepers of the Fire and the Wampum - as they still do at the official Longhouse on the Onondaga Reservation. [23] Now spread over reservations in New York and Ontario, the Six Nations of Haudenosaunee preserves this arrangement to this day in what they claim to be the world's oldest representative democracy. [24] Seneca Nation Republic was founded in 1848 and has two capitals that rotate the responsibility every two years. Jimerson Town was founded in the 1960s after the formation of Allegheny Reservoir. Senecas also has an administrative longhouse in Steamburg, but does not consider it the place to be a capital. Nation Window Rock (Navajo: Tségháhoodzání), Arizona, is a small town that serves as the seat of the government and capital of the Navajo Nation (1936-present), the largest territory of a sovereign Native American nation in North American nation in North American nation in North American nation of the St. Michael's Chapter, next to the Arizona and New Mexico state line. Window Rock hosts the Navajo Nation government campus that includes the Navajo Nation Council, the Navajo Nation Supreme Court, the offices of the Navajo Nation president and vice president, and many Navajo government buildings. Unknown national capitals There have been a handful of self-declared nations within america's current borders that were never officially recognized as legally independent sovereign entities: But these nations had de facto control over their respective regions during their existence. Vermont Republic Before joining the United States as the fourteenth state, Vermont was an independent republic. Two cities served as the capital of the Republic: Westminster, 1777 Windsor, 1777–? Castleton, ?–1791 The current capital of the state of Vermont is Montpelier. The state of Franklin State franklin was an autonomous, secessiest U.S. territory created, not long after the end of the American Revolution, from territory that was later derided by North Carolina to the federal government. Franklin's territory later became part of the state of Tennessee. Franklin was never officially admitted to the Union of th the Constitution, and designer of the flag. [25] It consisted of several strains of streams and seminoles. It existed from 1799 to 1803. It had one capital: Miccosukee, [26] 1799–1803 The Republic of West Florida was a short-lived nation that broke away from the territory of Spanish West Florida in 1810. It consisted of Florida Parishes in the modern state of Louisiana and mobile district in the modern state of Florida.) Ownership of the site had been contested between Spain and the United States, which claimed that it had been included in the Louisiana purchase in 1803. Within two months of the settler's rebellion and the declaration of an independent nation, President James Madison sent Us forces to occupy the new republic. It was formally annexed by the United States in 1812 over the objections of Spain and the land was divided between the Territory of Orleans Mississippi Territory. During its brief existence, the capital of the Republic of Indian Stream was an unknown independent nation in the current state of New Hampshire. The area that would become Pittsburg, New Hampshire, 1832–1835 California Republic Before being annexed by the United States in 1848 (after the Mexican-American War), a small part of north-central California declared itself the Republic existed only a month before it disbanded itself, to join the advancing Us Army and therefore became part of the United States. The very short-lived California Republic was never recognized by the United States, Mexico or any other nation. It was a de facto capital of the California Republic: Sonoma, 1846 Confederate states of America (C.S.A.) had two capitals during its existence. The first capital was established February 4, 1861, in Montgomery, Alabama, and remained there until it was moved to Richmond, Virginia, on May 29, 1861, after Virginia separated on May 23. The individual state capitals remained the same in the Confederacy as they had been in the Union (United States), but when the advancing Union Army used these cities for military districts, some of the Confederate governments were moved out of the state, traveling with secession armies. Montgomery, February 4, 1861 - May 29, 1861 Richmond, May 29, 1861 - April 3, 1865 Historic state, colonial and territorial capitals Most of the original thirteen colonies had their capitals occupied or attacked by the British during the American War of Independence. The city of New York was occupied by British troops from 1776 to 1783. A similar situation occurred during the American Civil War in many Confederate states, and during the Pueblo Uprising of 1680–1692 in New Mexico. Twenty-two state capitals have been a capital longer than their state has been a state, since they served as the capital of a predecessor territory, colony or republic. Boston, Massachusetts, has been a capital of a predecessor territory, colony or republic. Boston, Massachusetts, has been a capital of a predecessor territory, colony or republic. Boston, Massachusetts, has been a capital of the United States. Santa Fe, New Mexico, is the oldest capital, having become the capital in 1610 and interrupted only by the aforementioned Pueblo uprising. An even older Spanish town, St. Augustine, Florida, served as a colonial capital from 1565 to about 1820, more than 250 years, The table below contains the following information: The state, the year of statehood was granted, and the state capital appears in bold. NOTE: For the first thirteen states, formerly the thirteen colonies of The United States Constitution. (See List of U.S. States by date of admission to the Union.) The year listed for each capital is the start date; the end date is the start date of the successor unless otherwise specified. In many cases, capitals were in historical jurisdictions outside a state's current borders.
