Different modes of Twitch Chat For subscriber-Only chat, only viewers who have paid 5$ / month subscription for the current month will have unlocked the ability to chat in this mode. Different types of games will cause streamers to use only sub-only mode in different ways, but traditionally it is used when chat comes out of hand with new viewers and non-subs (sometimes referred to as plebs or stream hoppers) taking over, sometimes with aggressive or toxic chatting. For smaller streamers, if conversations move much slower, this mode is not as necessary as a small amount of moderation can usually filter out chatters making the experience worse, but for large streamers it can be very useful in certain situations. Emote-Only chat, again, is exactly how it sounds - a chat mode where no text can be written and only emotes are allowed to be used. (With the exception of moderators, streams, VIPs, bots, etc.) This is traditionally used in the same way as Sub-Only, in an attempt to deal with when chat gets out of hand (harassment, toxicity etc.), except that it completely removes the ability to write messages. Many times the chat will end up communicating what they want to say anyway through creative use of emotes, but this mode will help deal with the flood of individual trolls (Anonymous chatters who intentionally say controversial, rude or inappropriate things in the chat in an attempt to get attention from the streamer or viewers). There are several other ways that streamers use emote-only mode, some are avoiding spoilers for games or TV shows, and in certain games or categories like GTA RP - to avoid meta. (This is a different meta than that mentioned earlier. This meta happens when a viewer tells the streamer information that they should not know that will affect the outcome of the game or event unfairly.) Trailer-Only chat is the last of the three main modes, and probably the one you will run into at least frequently. This is mainly due to the possibility that the other two chat modes can solve a majority of the problems that can come from a larger chat getting out of hand. When follower-only mode is most useful is in time where the streamer does not want to cut off all viewers who have followed for a long time and support the stream but are not able to pay the $5/month subscriber fee. This subscriber only mode can create exclusion for these chatters who can't afford to subscribe but still want to join the chat, and depending on the streamer, the category and state of the chat, some streamers will use the trailer just instead of sub-only mode to deal with this. The different modes of Twitch chat are relatively self-explanatory based on their name, but when and why these modes are used may be unclear to new users. The following three chat modes are by far the most used, and the new viewers will run into most <Sorry to cancel CSS Error >Sorry to Error We've made changes to increase our security and have reset your password. Help Center Due to the high importance of Twitch brands, it is especially important for us as a supplier that each brand is of high quality and unique. The creation of such a Twitch brand set usually takes several hours, and attention is paid to every detail. Our designers do their best to ensure that the individual sub-brands harmonize perfectly with each other and are ultimately loved by your viewers. When choosing your Twitch badges, make sure they match your channel or streamed content at best. For example, if you're mainly streaming game content, you should select submarks related to it, such as controllers or weapons. If you mainly stream only chatting content, twitch brands can be a little finer, like unicorns or crazy hamsters. Of course, you can also choose brands that do not fit your channel - in the end you need to like them. However, you should always keep in mind that Twitch badges are very important for building your community, and if there's a connection to your stream, it usually helps build loyalty to your audience. Twitch added (But not officially announced it yet?) different brands for Gifters depending on the amount of submarines gifted. Here are some examples:10+50+100+EDIT: It doesn't seem to show the EXACT # of subs gifted (As subscribed months show now), that sucks, but otherwise it's awesome! Page 2 16 comments
