And if you use the feel for your plushie, choose a high quality wool or wool blend, which won't be the way acrylic can. And of course, a house-stitched stuffed animal isn't home-made. For example, if you plan to use a fur fabric for your project, try following these tips for working with fur to help give your softie a more professional look: To cut the fur fabric, place the fur side down, supporting the side up. And when fixing your pattern pieces onto your fur fabric, you may find it easier to use pattern weights to hold down pattern pieces instead of pins. Then you can trace your cutting line around the pieces with a fabric marking pen and cut simply by following the lines you have drawn. And if your fur has a nap in it (where the pile runs in one direction), be sure to lay down and cut your pattern so that all the pieces run in the same direction (usually with the pile running down). That way, all the clutter in your finished item will run in the same direction. And don't double your fabric as you usually would with a non-fur fabric. Instead cut your fur fabric into a single layer. This way, you won't try to cut two bulky layers at once and avoid cutting into the fur. (See the next page for more tips on working with fur.)
