Read the Latin ad is Looking for Ythul ad Astra. sic is an adverb that means in this way. itur is direct theory, receiving phase, present, third person, and unique irregular verso change which means go. The intransferor receiving phase is used in non-person expressions. At this point, it means generalized content, and here it can be translated as people go. the ad is a preposition that means a, which is a case. astra is the multiple case of the noun astrum with the second change, which means star, heavenly body. It can be translated as This is how man will go to the stars and thus he will ascend to heaven. A person is a generalized person. It is an expression seen in Aenois by Bergirius (Aen.9.641). (Sic itur ad astra excelsior!) I never thought I'd ever work up the courage to start a blog. I've always admired people who have put themselves on the Internet, like, although they are admired, they can be judged and criticized by people who don't really know them. Now I know that criticism can be a good thing... great, even if you have the right thinking for it... but at the same time, there is a fine line between constructive criticism, and someone just trying to break others down (I know They Know It Sounds like a Teacher) So in the hope that maybe someone will actually enjoy the content on this page, I'll take the chance to be criticized in order to do something I've always wanted to do. I'm interested in sharing my experiences in life (I just graduated from high school, so there are some life lessons out there that I think people might find help, and I'm just going to start my year. So I'll be updating my experience on how everything goes), maybe some fashion/beauty posts, creative writing that I do as a hobby, travel, my unhealthy obsession with everything Disney and Harry Potter... Etc. Basically, whatever I find interesting to read about, I want to write for this blog. Congratulations if you've read all this. Extremely boring - I know - but hopefully it will be better. So stick around if you want to see where this goes ☺ Love Always, Hazel Latin is an abomination for many people – and yet it has produced numerous meanings and wisdoms. The expression Sic itur ad astra is particularly well known in the American world. The stars were already an important attraction for Virgil. For many students, Latin is a mandatory elective subject, which at some point almost inevitably ends on the calendar. Although it is extremely easy for some because of its logic, students who are talented in other languages often can't do anything with Latin and vote it again as soon as possible. However, there are Latin phrases that everyone actually knows - In vino veritas, for example. Sic itur ad astra is not so well known, but it has a beautiful meaning. Sic itur ad astra - origin and translation Sic itur ad astra - this sentence calls in Virgil's Aeneis Apollo to the young warrior Ascanius after he killed an enemy. The translation of this sentence is a bit controversial. If it translates literally correctly, it follows: This is how the stars are gone, because the original Latin is a passive construction. In German, however, such a construction does not sound very clever, which is why the sentence is often remodeled a little. It uses a man, which is very possible when transferring passive constructions into German, and the sentence sounds better: This is how you go to the stars or, a little more freely translated: This is how you climb to the stars. Apollo's sentence suggests that many Roman heroes are immortalized in the stary sky, so a hero a path to heaven, a ins Göttliche. So, hat dieser Satz eine sehr feierliche und schöne Bedeutung, die in den USA gern genutzt wird. Die Verwendung in den USA Häufig wird die Phrase in den USA gekürzt, sodas nur noch Ad astra also zu den Sternen stehen bleibt. Dieses Motto wurde unter anderem von der Air Force Academy verwendet, ist aber auch bei vielen Highschools beliebt. Die Langform Sic itur ad astra ist das Motto der Stadt Richmond in Virginia sowie das der Air Force im Nachbarland Kanada. Auch die NASA verweist in Publikationen immer wieder gern auf Vergils beziehungsweise Apollos berühmte Worte.Wie hilfreich finden Sie diesen Artikel? At Herts & Essex we put into practice the motto of our school, Sic Itur ad Astra (Reach for the Stars), giving all students the support and challenge to optimize their learning, progress and academic results. We pride ourselves on knowing our students as individuals and a number of are available to all students. At all key stages, the progress of individual students is rigorously tracked against target levels (key stage 3) and target scores (key stages 4 and 5). These target levels and target grades are difficult and represent a student's level of achievement if they work as well as they can during study programmes. Study, to these target levels and grades is reported to students and parents on a regular basis, through parent consultation ins, written reports and follow-up reports, which parents access through Firefly. After each, all students meet with either their form tutor or the deputy principal for their key stage to discuss their academic progress and their goals in detail. Where it is identified that individual pupils are at risk of not performing, appropriate and timely personalised interventions shall be put in place. These include Form Tutor mentoring at all key stages, academic coaching and mentoring in key stage 4 and the use of academic support plans at key stage 5. If students make excellent progress, or are higher than their target levels/degrees, a number of stretch and challenge initiatives are encouraged. These include expansion works in individual disciplines, invitations to participate in the Challenge for all summer schools, both within the school and at oxbridge and Russell group universities, participating in prestigious programs, such as the Nuffield scholarship program and mentoring with the Challenge for all coordinator. Providing an All- Round Education for Every Student All students at Herts & Essex have access to a remarkable, exciting and engaging range of enrichment and co-curricular activities. They aim to develop students' talents, introduce them to stimulate new opportunities and promote important personal skills, such as teamwork, initiative and resilience. Whether they represent the school in our highly successful sports teams, presenting their performance skills in our impressive music, theatre and dance productions or participating in challenges such as Maths Challenge, Arts Award and CREST Award, there are activities to involve the interest of each student. Students are also offered somewhere in the region of 150 trips and visits each academic year, including residential in countries such as France, Spain, Germany, Uganda, India, Cambodia and the USA. In addition, our thriving school community offers numerous opportunities for students to demonstrate and develop their leadership skills. At all key stages, students enthusiastically support choice in a number of roles, including School Board representatives, formal captains, junior and senior chamber captains, senior students and senior prefects. There are also several Student Associate Governors who attend the Governors meetings, representing the views of the student body. It is quite true to say that student leadership and voice is at the heart of life at Herts & Essex. Lessons, tutorials and PSHEE also provides an excellent opportunity for students to develop broader skills and knowledge. For example, there are structured programmes of career education and information, counselling and guidance, which informed decision-making on their education, including the transition at the end of 11 and year 13. Meetings and tutorials also address a number of important topics, including political, economic and environmental issues, with the aim of stimulating debate among students and ensuring that they develop equally well, with compassion and respectful young people. Student involvement in school, local, national and international communities Herts & Essex has a proud and successful tradition of encouraging student involvement in school, local, national and international communities. Within the school, students contribute valuably through volunteering and training for a diverse range of roles, including student librarians, peer mentors, peer readers and sports leaders. The local community also benefits from the enthusiasm and expertise of our students through their participation in our long-term primary information activity, which involves primary school students in our excellent provision in all areas of the curriculum. Nationally, we have a thriving interact group working with Rotary to raise money for charities. Students have organized popular events, such as showcases of talent, days wearing it pink and Herts and Essex bake - offs to raise in addition to £12,000 each academic year for charity. Our students are also regularly invited to attend and attend national conferences and events addressing issues such as student voice and leadership, entrepreneurship and citizenship. Internationally, we are proud of our status as an International School, which is reflected in our partnership with Eden High School in Uganda and which has been developed through projects in India and Cambodia. All these international ties involve students in raising money and participating in programs to support local communities. Our students are always outstanding ambassadors for Herts & Essex, whether they represent the school locally or further afield. Herts & Essex House System The six houses/colors Herts & Essex - Astra (white), Castle (violet), Forest (green), Hart (yellow), Lea (blue) and Seaxe (red) - each takes their name and color from aspects of the school badge. It is an exceptionally successful system and students become very loyal to their home especially on Sports Day, when there is both Sports Day and the House Cup for the whole take! The houses are run by the senior house captains of the sixth form; the system encourages our students to mingle with others in different groups of years through dedicated house assemblies and involvement in a multitude of enjoyable activities where participation matters safety more than winning, although winning helps! When new students join our school, they quickly become aware that they are joining and the supportive community. Community.
