It surrounds the Neighborhood of Portage. The population was 3,640 at the 2000 census. [3] It is part of the Johnstown, Pennsylvania Metropolitan Statistical Area. History The stone arch bridge in the municipality of Portage was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1988. [4] The Sonman mine explosion occurred here in 1940, killing 63 coal miners. Geography Portage Township is located southeast of Cambria County around coordinates 40°18'39N,78°56'2O / 40.31083°N, 78.93389°O / 40.31083; -78.93389Coordinates: 40°18'39N,78°56'2 O / 40.31083°N 78.93389°C / 40.31083; -78.93389. The municipality surrounds the district of Portage and touches the district of Cassandra on its northeastern border. The unmadded community of Spring Hill lies in the southwestern part of the municipality, just south of portage district. The municipality's southeastern border follows the Blair County line and roughly follows the ridge of the Allegheny Front, the height of land between the Susquehanna River basin to the east and the drainage of the Ohio River to the west. The Little Conemaugh River flows west through the northern part of the municipality, leading to the Conemaugh River in Johnstown. Portage Municipality is located approximately 16 km southeast of Ebensburg, the seat of Cambria County, 31 km northeast of Johnstown, and 40 km southwest of Altoona. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, the municipality has a total area of 64.4 km², of which 64.1 square kilometers are land and 0.3 km² (0.3 km2) or 0.39%, is water. [3] Due to mountainous terrain in and around Portage Municipality, it has become (along with other municipalities in the area) the seat of Pennsylvania's largest wind farm. The Allegheny Ridge Wind Farm began operations in the first quarter of 2007 and will eventually generate 150MW of power, or roughly enough to power 75,000 homes. This wind farm consists of 75 Gamesa G87 wind turbines of 2MW. Census communities designated are geographical areas designated by the U.S. Census Bureau in order to collect demographic data.
