It was renovated between 1977 and 1978. It has an ionic tetrastyle entrance with two-story columns. [2] In 1980, it was entered in the National Register of Historic Places. [1] It was designed by architect William J.J. Chase. A 1980 architectural survey form about the courthouse claimed to be the most significant building in Donalsonville, a city of 3,500 people. Architecturally, it is one of the most distinctive courthouses in the state from the 1920s, due to the design and details of the interior and exterior. [2] It is also a contributing building in the historic Donalsonville district, which is listed on the NRHP list. Links ^ and b National Register Information System.
