If you have this installed and access your email accounts through this, go to the in-app notification settings page. From the app menu, tap Settings, and then select an email address. You can set to the next screen whether notifications are displayed in the status bar and whether they are signaling with sound or vibration. If you have multiple email accounts configured through your app, you can set different notification settings for each. 2 Android Email App The default email app available with Android version stocks uses separate notification settings for each account you add. These notification settings are displayed when you create an account and can be changed at any point later. Tap the app menu button (three vertical points), select Settings, and then select the Yahoo email address. You can turn notifications on or off under notification settings to connect audio and vibration to them. 3 Third-party launchers and apps If you turned on notifications in the appropriate email app, there should be no reason not to display them unless you have installed a third-party launcher that overrides the default notification settings. These alternative starters customize different aspects for home screens and Android interface, and some allow you to change your notification display settings. If you installed the launcher, check the individual configuration settings for the options that apply to notifications. Also, if you're using something other than the Yahoo Mail app or the default Android email app, check the notification options app itself. 4 Email sync If new emails don't appear in the selected email app at all, check the sync settings associated with it. If you've set up the official Yahoo Mail app, check your Yahoo account options from the main Settings app for your device; if you are using the default Android Email app, the sync settings can be under Sync frequency on the e-mail app settings page. If you want to check new messages at intervals of five minutes to one hour, you can choose to manually sync messages on demand. 5 Version Denial of Responsibility The above information applies to and has been verified with the stock of Android 4.4, the latest version of the operating system from November 2013.
