Somehow Sharley was both both, a creature that should never have existed - a creature of strength and pain who had worked his grief on the structure of his being. He had been born devastated, his soul and psyche broken from the moment his conflicting eyes opened... And he had the power to crush reality. Lorna wondered if their enemy knew what it was facing. If it had any idea how terrified it should be. Zeig Dich, what are you doing? After the end of the world. Best time creativity._____The link to all my accounts [D&D Stylized Commission]Lasair Wildfire Druid tabaxi, and Jaktu wolf spirit ~It was been a while since he had been back in the heart of Neverwinter Wood, but the trees had demanded it. He guessed there was a wound in the tree that needed to be treated, that others couldn't help. So much for the Green Druids who are the only real druids. Lasair grinned at the thought. Simply natural healing didn't work every time and that magical cult had used dark magic to twist the nature around it. This problem required a bolder solution. When Lasair came to the edge of a now darkened and twisted scar in the forest, he stretched out his paw, palm, into the sky. He closed his eyes and took a deep breath. From the destruction, this will see the Tree reborn. His eyes open, the gaze of conviction and the limited rage wash over his face as the eyes of the totem eye around his neck begin to glow with the finest flames. The catman then holds both paws in front of him as the cleansing flames ignite, burning all the darkness in his path. [Rads&Radicals] The following draft racial concepts; Halves!
