Ozark Trail makes dozens of tents and shelters for campers, beachgoers and backyard sun loungers a single. Though some combine the tent and screened cabinet ideas to give you a few ways to use your shelter, the company's Screenhouse model is what it says it is - and a little carport too. If you're trying to put together the 10-by-13-foot or 12-by-14-foot model, the same instructions will apply. For about 15 minutes, you should bask in the shade. Spread your poles and connect joints on the ground. Lay out the screen cloth flat nearby. Make three poles made of three pole sections marked 2B and a final pole section marked 2. Place the two common sections marked T on either side of the rod that will be your center, most elevated pole. Place end joints firmly on the other two longest poles that will be the sides of your Screenhouse. Put an L joint and an R joint on each pole, then orient them to accept poles from the center bar direction. Make four connecting rods, each with a section marked 1 and 1B. Connect the ends of the center and side poles of your shelter. Make two poles, each with a section marked 5 and 5B. Place the end loops of each of these small poles in the corresponding holes in the center of the center and side bars. This will be a support in the middle of the shelter. Make four page posts, with two sections marked 1B at the top and a section marked 4 for the bottom of the posts. The end of each 4 section must have the end with the hole pointing downwards for use with the screen. Walk around your Shelterhouse and tap each section common fixed and completely in place. Throw the screen cloth on to the skeleton roof and connect each corner to the bottom of each rod with the connected hook. Connect the inside of the Screenhouse to the poles with the connected straps. © 1996-2014, Amazon.com, Inc. or its subsidiaries Ozark Trail Screen House Parts .
