Open a CIT Bank Money Market account here >>If you only have a few minutes, you can spend it filling out online surveys. There are several websites that you will pay for, and it is very simple. All you need to do is register and start answering questions. Typically, these are online market research surveys for large brands. Some companies even pay you just for installing an app or playing a game! Some of the most popular online survey sites are:2. Test websites website testing, in my opinion, is one of the funnier ways to make decent money quickly. Website owners often want unbiased criticism of their website usability, where website testers come into play. Website testers will browse a website and record their thoughts on usability and design. As a tester, you are paid pretty well for your opinion! With UserTesting.com, you can earn 10 dollars for testing a website that takes only about twenty minutes. Payments are made daily over PayPal seven days after completing your first assignment.3. Dog sitting or baby sitNote the order of operations there? Hahah. Anyway, if you have some time (like less than an hour), you can sign up to sit dog or baby sitting for people near you. If you're a pet lover, check out Rover! By Dr. Mary Dowd Updated November 09, 2020 Anthropology is a broad field suitable for many diverse and exciting careers. According to the American Anthropologic Association, the four main areas of anthropology include archaeology, biological anthropology, cultural anthropology, and linguistic anthropology. Anthropologists are social scientists who study ancient contemporary societies to better understand the human condition. Beginner anthropology jobs as technicians are possible with a bachelor's degree, but a Master's or Ph.D. opens up more career opportunities that offer higher salaries. Anthropologists immerse themselves in the study of cultures around the world. Their specialisation area determines the type of research they carry out. Sun biological anthropologists how humans and primates like monkeys adapt and evolve to changing environments. They can study fossils or observe monkeys in the wild to learn more about their biology and behavior. Archaeologists are also digging for fossils and examining artifacts, but they are more interested in solving mysteries in human history. Anthropological job descriptions usually focus on Activities that can lead to discoveries that could change the ideas in textbooks. Forensic anthropologists help police identify victims based on analysis of bone fragments and skeletal remains that reveal height, age, gender, disease and trauma. Essential skills include patience, attention to detail, critical thinking and analytical nature. A bachelor's degree in anthropology is the minimum training requirement to work as a laboratory assistant or field technician in this field, reports the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS). Most anthropologists have a two-year master's degree or a Ph.D. in a specialized field of interest. They often travel abroad to archaeological sites and learn a foreign language to deepen their awareness and appreciation for other cultures. Anthropologists pursuing a doctorate learn quantitative and qualitative research methods and spend about 18 to 30 months working on field research as part of their dissertation. Anthropology students learn to apply theories to solve real problems such as food shortages, limited access to health, and human rights. The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that from 2019, anthropologists and archaeologists will earn an average wage of .30.61 per hour, or 63,670 U.S. dollars per year. (Median means that half earns more and half earns less.) Fifty per cent of these professionals earn anywhere between USD 23.92 per hour or USD 49,760 per year and USD 39.17 per hour or USD 81,480 per year. The lifestyle of anthropologists depends on the working environment and the time they spend in the field. Some are employed by universities, indigenous organizations, museums, the White House, government agencies and the U.S. military, according to Palomar College. Work can require frequent travel and can be away from home for a long time to study culturally significant sites. Anthropology jobs can also require physical endurance and the ability to tolerate harsh living conditions in remote areas. Anthropologists with experience and graduate degrees can conduct independent research, monitor laboratory technicians, you can teach college courses with a PhD in anthropology. Beginner anthropologists with a bachelor's degree can fall 10 per cent in the lower wage bracket, earning a salary of .18.97 per hour, or a year's salary of .39.460. Anthropologists with years of experience and a college degree are more likely to fall into the top 10 per cent pay bracket and earn more than '47.09 per hour, or '97,950 per year. BLS expects demand for anthropologist jobs to increase by 5 percent in the decade to 2029 slightly above the expected growth rate of other occupations. Anthropology jobs will be needed to help companies better understand and market different demographic groups and cultures. The opportunities are best for those with research knowledge and graduate degrees. Degree. Degree.
