

Gt08 smart watch user manual

Smart watches are undoubtedly one of the hottest technology trends this year. Available for Apple iPhone, Google's Android smartphone, and in some cases compatible with both operating systems, they look like a wristwatch but provide notifications at a glance from your smartphone, as well as act as an activity tracker and even a wearable MP3 player. But with prices starting at around £299 and rising to a whopping £8,000, are they really worth the money? As a good Houskeeping Institute technology expert, I've worn the Apple Watch over the past month to see how useful a smartwatch can be. I'll admit that I was initially skeptical that it would enhance my life and instead see the smart watch as a flashy gadget that people buy entirely as a status symbol. However, over the past month I have grown to love the Apple Watch and now I am a converted smartwatch - this is why ... Notice at a glance I have never been one to check my phone every five minutes. It's often silent because I have 'funny' ringtones for some friends and family - it's quite embarrassing when your phone starts blaring out thomas the Tank Engine theme tunes because my brother is calling. However, the gentle vibrations on my wrist from the smart meter alerted me that I received the message. Then I can quickly decide whether to jump for the phone to answer it or, if it's absolutely a link to a funny cat video, deal with it at my leisure. Find my phone A drawback of always having the phone in your pocket is that it is never possible to find it when it rings. Apple Watch has a handy feature that allows you to 'ping' your phone so that it will generate high noise that allows you to track it easily. The Android Wear smart watch has a similar feature that will cause the phone to ring at full volume so you can find it. Discreet music I love listening to music when I'm exercising. I tend to use my phone and a pair of Bluetooth headphones but if I smash the pavement I'm conscious of my smartphone on the display on the arm. With a smart watch, I can sync about 250 songs to the watch, thereby connecting to a Bluetooth headset so I can still enjoy music when running but it doesn't feel like I'm advertising the fact that I already have a smartphone. When wearing a tunic, the watch is not even visible. If you're thinking of getting an Android smart watch, you'll also be able to sync music to it. Directions To quickly see your exact location, just tap the map icon on the clock, then tap the icon name to show your location. However, to get directions, you need to ask Siri - personally, I find speaking aloud to the clock in public a little awkward. Kitchen timer I'm a edgy chef and I can always be found in the kitchen, but there's nothing worse than trying to set a timer on my phone with grease or powder powder However, just say Hey Siri to my watch, I can ask Apple Personal Assistant to set a timer for me. Most Android smart watches have similar built-in voice controls. Two chargers that Apple only offers Night Sleep Mode The charger that comes with the Apple Watch is remote and attached to the back of the watch. It also allows the watch to sit on its edge when charging and acts as a digital watch to display the time. Just press the digital crown on the side of the watch to illuminate the time - very handy at night on my bedside table. My Apple Pay Wallet is usually at the bottom of my bag, along with my phone, but thanks to Apple Pay on the Apple Watch there's no need to spend a lot of time digging around trying to find either. When Apple Pay is set up (You'll need a debit or service-supported credit card) just double-click the digital crown to display your payment card (if you have multiple swipes left or right to select the card) you want to use) and then hover your wrist near the card reader and wait for vibration and audio that indicates payment has been made. The equivalent Anroid Pay, has yet to launch in the UK. And one thing I don't like... After a month I still refused to talk to the clock in public. So don't use Siri on your Apple Watch to spell answers to new text messages, emails, or simply search the web. I think it makes me look like Buzz Lightyear and I hate ear-wigging strangers about my life! But when I'm alone, that's what I'm starting to accept. I was able to ask Siri to set a timer, so maybe it won't be too long before I fill up my phone call over the clock - just alone! Stay connected with this wearable technology at a glance that's all the rage. Follow our guide to learn more! START The fast-growing smart watch market, with new devices and styles hitting stores all the time, offers more options on what to wear on your wrist to stay in touch. If you're someone who likes to update your social media streams or check who's calling before you pick up your phone, the smart watch is a fancy wearable kit that has a range of features, apps, and games to keep technicians happy soon. However, before you start shopping around, you need to know which smart watches work with the electric brand Would. Your smart watch needs to 'talk' to your phone, so your options will be narrowed when you start to see what's available with the same compatible operating system (OS). There are models that Work alone without a smartphone, by accessing the internet through a built-in plane, but they are far and less middle and you still need a suitable phone device to set them up in the first place. A new smart watch will take a little getting used to. Talking to your wrist, for example, while walking down the street can raise odd eyebrows, but the thrill of using the latest technology is hard to beat. You also need to consider what you want from your smart meter. This market is growing all the time and not all smart watches have the same functionality. Think about what's important to you. Some models excel in battery life, while others stand out for ease of use. If the look of the smart watch is important - and frankly, why wouldn't it be?! - there are some great designs available with serious bling appeal, some offering interchangeable straps and colored backgrounds. And for fans of James Bond's classic watch in GoldenEye, which comes full with a laser beam and remote control for exploding devices, you won't be disappointed. Okay, your neighbors can rest easy at night, but most come with enough gadgets and technical techniques to meet a modern M. And if you can't have Daniel Craig, a smartwatch is the next best thing! OPTIONS Operating the Smartwatch system has taken off in a big way and there are new smartwatch models launched every month. The technology is also changing at breakneck speed. When they first launch, there are three operating systems to choose one that is compatible with your smartphone. Options are more restricted for iPhone users, compared to Android, to pair devices. But Android Wear is now compatible with iOS, although this change comes with some warnings (see below). Watch OS for Apple watch. If you want one of these smart watches, you'll need an iPhone mobile device to work with it. Like the iPhone, it looks like Apple will introduce regular upgrades, with the recently released Apple Watch 2 Operating System, followed quickly with an update to the operating system, 2.0.1. The styles are different but the features, processors and components are the same across all models. You can make phone calls, spell out text messages, use Apple Pay, check your synced calendar, and talk to your virtual assistant 'Siri' to make calls for you! Prices vary depending on the type of material the watch is produced, with the gold version making headlines starting at £8,000! The Android WearGoogle operating system works with a number of different smart watch manufacturers and the majority of watches available will be compatible with Android Wear, so you can be more selective in the watch style you buy and should find one that suits most of your budget. Each phone will come with its own feature range though, which will help narrow down Wear for iOS and roid Wear for iOS is now available, making it compatible with iPhone. So these watches are opening up more choices here. However, you'll need to have an iPhone running iOS 8.2 or later, and not all Android Wear smart watches are compatible - only newer models work with iPhones. You may also find that the Android Wear features available on your iPhone are limited, compared to features on Android devices. For example, you may receive notifications from third-party Apps, such as Twitter and Facebook, but you may see limited functionality when replying to messages or emails. That's not to say functionality will increase in time. Technology for smart watches is growing, with improvements changing with the day. Pebble OSThe Pebble OS works with Pebble smart watches and the operating system works with both Apple and Android smartphones. Unlike other devices on the market, Pebble uses an electronic paper display - like an e-reader - and no touchscreen. To access features you use side buttons, like using traditional digital watches. Tizen OSSamsung's operating system works with Samsung smartphones, although Samsung's latest wearable device on the market is compatible with most Android phones and may soon be compatible with iPhone.THINGS TO CONSIDERTouchscreenYou can operate your smartwatch to open the app, enter text messages, etc. the same way you do your smartphone, with a touchscreen. However, the Pebble series of smart watches use side buttons to control functions. Voice actions as emails and text messages in spelling. Since the screen is guite small, this is a useful function that you will use more and more when you are accustomed to talking to your wrist. Activity TrackerSo is built-in to use your smart meter to track your daily fitness and get detailed measurements in specific exercises. Some smart watches also have built-in heart rate and pulse monitoring and sleep monitoring, just like regular activity trackers. Remote Control Allows you to use the smart watch as a remote control music or camera play on your smartphone. Turn on Bluetooth To connect your smart watch to the internet so you can access phone features and signals to check your text messages, you'll need to connect that watch to your smartphone through a Bluetooth connection. Tetherless Wi-FiEnables your smart meter to connect to an open Wi-Fi network without having to connect to your mobile phone or iPhone first. Built-in GPS Help you keep your phone while following the instructions on the map. Smart AppsS keep track news, weather and load more next door. Face ViewA series of watch faces from analog to digital style to customize your watch to match your outfit! Scratch-resistant Modelspremium come with their own brand of high scratch resistant glass covers. Battery lifeThe batteryThe time you can use your watch before it needs to recharge. If this is important to you, shop around. The latest models coming on the market boast up to 10 days of battery life, but some poor rates in this area. Some models can be charged wirelessly. Water/dust resistance While a smart watch will not be completely waterproof, most will have a water and dust resistance assessment to assess how resistant it is to rain. Dust is harder to do. A device that can be overwhelmed by cat fur for example! You need to check your device's IP speed, which stands for International Protection Rating. Each model will come with two figures after it, first for dust and second for water, so you can see IP67, which means it is completely protected from dust (6) and can also withstand being submerged in 1m static water for up to 30 minutes (7) - see chart below. This technology is moving quickly on these new watches and it will not be long before you find most smart watches waterproof, but in the meantime common sense should prevail!
