For the song by Steve Holy, see Blue Moon (Steve Holy song). Blue MoonSongPublished1934 by Robbins MusicComposer(s) Richard RodgersLyricist(s)Lorenz Hart Blue Moon is a classic folk song written by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart in 1934. It may be the first example of the familiar progression of 50s in a popular song and has become a standard ballad. The song was a hit twice in 1949, with successful usability recordings in the US by Billy Eckstine and Mel Tormé. In 1961, Blue Moon became a number one international hit for doo-wop group The Marcells, on the 100 billboard and in the UK singles chart. Over the years, Blue Moon has been covered by various artists, including versions of Frank Sinatra, Billie Holiday, Elvis Presley, Sam Cooke, The Platters, The Mavericks, Dean Martin, Yvonne De Carlo, The Supremes, Cyndi Lauper, Bob Dylan and Rod Stewart. Bing Crosby included the song in a medley on his album On the Happy Side (1962). The Cowboy Junkies recorded the song on their album The Trinity Sessions. It is also the anthem of English football club Crewe Alexandra and English Premier League football club Manchester City, who have easily adapted the song. Context Rodgers and Hart were contracted with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in May 1933. They were soon ordered to write the songs for The Hollywood Party, a film that was to play many of the studio's top artists. Rodgers recalled: One of our ideas was to include a scene in which Jean Harlow is presented as an innocent young woman who says - or rather sings - her prayers, the sequence mounted in the film I do not have the most fogful notion, but the goal was to express Harlow's overwhelming ambition to become a movie star (Oh my God, if you're not busy up there, / I ask for help with a prayer / So please don't give me air...). The song was not recorded (the film was released without Harlow in 1934[2]) and MGM Song No. 225 Prayer (Oh Lord, make me a movie star) on June 14, 1933, was recorded for copyright as an unpublished work on July 10, 1933. [3] Hart wrote new lyrics for the song to create a title song for the 1934 film Manhattan Melodrama: Act One:/You weave coffee and run;/In the subway you pile up./Don't breathe, it's not allowed. [4] The song, which was also titled It's Just That Kind of Play, was cut from the film before its release and recorded for copyright as an unpublished work on March 30, 1934. The studio then asked for a nightclub number for the film. Rodgers still liked the song, so Hart wrote a third verse: The Bad in Every Man (Oh My God... /I can be good to a lover,/But then I always discovered/The bad in ev'ry man[4]), which was sung by Shirley Ross. After the film was released by MGM, Jack Robbins — decided that the song was suitable for commercial release, but needed more romantic lyrics and punchier title. Hart was initially reluctant to write another verse, but was persuaded. [3] Robbins licensed the song to the Hollywood Hotel, a radio program that used it as a theme. The cover of Robbins' 1934 music music credits Ted Fio Rito (vocals by Muzzy Marcellino) for presenting the song, recorded on Brunswick 7315, October 19, 1934. [6] The song reached the Top Ten for 18 weeks in Variety, reaching number one on January 26, 1935. [7] The song was also recorded by Glen Gray and the Casa Loma Orchestra for Decca Records in November 1934[8] and Connee Boswell for Brunswick Records in 1935. He later appeared in at least seven MGM films, including Marx Brothers' At the Circus (1939) and Viva Las Vegas (1964). [3] There are two introductory verses in the original Robbins sheet music edition. Eric Clapton and Rod Stewart sang the first verse in their 2004 version of the song (Stardust: The Great American Songbook, Volume III). The last line of the first verse is: Life was a bitter cup for the slowest of all people. [9] On September 16, 2018, an article in The New York Times revealed that Liz Roman Guallesse, a documentary filmmaker, had provided evidence on her website about a 1936 trial in which she claimed that Blue Moon was written by her father, Edward W. Roman. The family's story was that her father sold the piece for $900 to buy a car, or maybe he had settled with the rich and famous Rodgers and Hart for that amount. Ted Chapin, creative director of Rodgers & Hammerstein, said he hadn't heard of Galley's story and that it seemed a bit far-fetched. His cover version of the song was included on his 1956 debut album, Elvis Presley, published on RCA Records. Presley's remake of Blue Moon was coupled with Just Becaus as a single in August 1956. Blue Moon spent seventeen weeks on the Billboard Top 100, although it only reached number 55. In Jim Jarmusch's 1989 film mystery train, the three distinct stories that make up the narrative are related to part of Presley's version of Blue Moon (as it is on a radio show) and a subsequent offscreen firestrike, which is once played during each story, revealing that the three stories take place simultaneously in real time. In 1961, the Marcelli had three more songs to record and needed one more. Producer Stu Phillips didn't like any of the other songs, except for one that had the same chord changes as Heart and Soul and Blue Moon. He asked them if they knew either, and one knew Blue Moon and taught it to others, though with the bridge or press (the middle section – I heard someone whisper ...) wrong. [18] The famous introduction to the song (bomp-baba-bomp and dip-da-dip-da-dip) was an excerpt from an original song the group had in its act. [19] It also reached number one on the UK Singles Chart. Marcells' version of Blue Moon sold millions of copies and received a gold disc. [20] It is featured in the 500 rock and roll songs of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame that shaped rock and roll. The Marcells doo-wop version is one of three different versions used in the 1981 london film An American Werewolf, which appears at the end of the film. A version of Bobby Vinton plays during the opening titles of the film while a version of Sam Cooke plays during the famous scene of the transformation of the werewolves. Marcells' version of the song is mentioned in the animated Disney from 1962, nominated for an Oscar, a symposium about popular songs the song, Puppy Love Is Here to Stay written by Robert & Richard Sherman.
