Copyright © 2021 InfoSpace Holding, LLC, a System1 Company Here are a few words about cancer that your family probably will need to know. You may want to explain them in a family meeting, for all children (and know what you mean when you use the words. Be sure to check to find out if there are other words being heard that they don't understand. Also tell them who they should ask if they hear other words they don't know. Older children may look at some of the words for themselves, but some of the more specialized medical terms can still be difficult to understand. Benign (eBay-NINE): No cancer (see also cancer, maligneran). Biopsy (PA-op-SAW): A procedure that removes a small piece of tissue from a person's body so that a doctor can look at it under a microscope. This is made to see if someone has cancer and if so, what kind of it is (see also tissue). Cancer: A name for more than 100 diseases in which non-normal cells grow and divide quickly. These normal cells are usually developed in a humor (or mask or lump). Cancer can also spread to other parts of the body where it started. Certain types of cancers can grow into places such as bone range, where they don't make a humor. Chemotherapy (KEY-THAIR-uh-pee); also called chemo: a treatment that uses drugs to kill cancer cells. Common side effects of chemo include short-term hair loss, nausea and vomiting, lucky lips, feeling tired, and a larger likelihood of getting infections. The type of side effects a person has depends on the drugs they are getting. All chemo drugs do not cause the same side effects, and the same drug can cause somewhat different side effects to different people. Clinical trials: Research studies established using human volunteers compared new cancer treatments with standard or usual treatments. Fatigue (fuh-TEEG): A common symptom during cancer treatment, a bone-weary fatigue that doesn't get better with rest. For some, this may last for some time after treatment. Malignant (muh-LEAGUE-LEAGUE-nunt): cancer. Malignancy is another word for cancer. Metastasi (meh-TAS-Tuh-six): The spread of cancer in one part of the body of another. The plural is metastases (meh-tas-tuh-see). Oncologists (on-KAHL-uh-lift): a doctor who specializes in treating cancers. There are medical, surgical, and radiation oncologists. Prognosis (prog-NO-SIS): A prediction of the course of disease; the perspective for their chances of survival. Protocol (PRO-tuh-call): A detailed, standard plan that follows when treating people with cancer. Radiation Therapy: A cancer treatment that uses high-energy radios to kill cancer cells. This treatment is given by a machine or by material put in or near the deceive. The secondary effects of radiation therapy usually show up in parts of the body being treated. For example: melting in the skin where the radiation is given, the hair loss of head if the hair loss is being treated, and that full if the stomach has been processed. Fatigue is the most common side effect of radiation. Recurrence: The cancer is back; cancer cells began to grow again after Relapse (RE-laps): same as recurrence: cancer that came back after a period of free illness. Remission (re-MISH-imp): Extinction or reduction of cancer symptoms in response to treatment. Remissions may be partial or complete; a complete remission means there is no sign of cancer in testing, analysis, and physical examination. Side effects: problems caused by cancer treatment or other medications. Operation: A procedure that usually cuts open part of the body. It's done by an operation, a physician who is an expert in performing surgery. Tissue (TISH-oo): A collection of cells that work together to perform a certain task or function in the body. Different parts of the body, such as the skin, lungs, liver, or nerves can be called toilet paper. Doctors often tissue biopsy to find out if he has cancer cells in it (see also unhealthy, benign, biopsy). Tumor: An unusual tissue ball. Some cancers are cancers and some are not. There will be other words applying for the treatment of your family member that your child may want to learn.
