Cat stevens cat's in the cradle song lyrics

When Doja Cat released the song, it went viral on TikTok. That's how it's done. A quick scroll through the app reveals that users dance, cook and show off their pets with Say So in the background. They flexed, debuted glowingly, and presented DIY home renovations to the tune of Boss B*tch, and performed many hand dances for Like That. But when did Doja Cat become the unofficial voice of Tiktok? Doja Cat first went viral in August 2018 when she released a low-fi video for her song Moooi! new song from which you may remember the lyrics B*tch, I'm a cow. The video has amassed more than 70 million views on YouTube. Now, you can't scroll through your FYP without hearing at least one of its songs. According to Isabel Quinteros, senior manager of music partnerships and artist relationships at TikTok, Say So alone - which poses her own dance challenges that are trending around the New Year - amassed more than 20 million video creations, helping [Doja Cat] score her first Billboard Hot 100. What's with the Doja Cat songs that make TikTokers destroy people like that? According to RedOne, a music producer and songwriter who works with pop acts, though not Doja herself, all of Doja Cat's hit songs are very blessed with magic hooks. The use of repetition is also very important, RedOne told Bustle. If you want people to learn the song, you have to repeat the lyrics and melody to help them. In doja Cat's case, RedOne says that Say So, Like That, and Boss B*tch have mnemonic qualities built into them. (A representative for Doja Cat did not respond to a request for comment for this story.) Pop producer Erich Lennig agrees. Say So and Boss B*tch teach you how to obsess over them by playing the same music patterns over and over again, so you know what to expect and get caught instantly. In the Say So episode in particular, Lennig cites the nostalgic '70s-inspired sound ceiling as a musical trick that makes the song feel fresh and well worn at the same time. Basically, it fools you into thinking you've heard the song before. It's a rhythmic hypnotic vocal pattern that gives these songs earworm quality, Lennig adds. As for what makes Doja Cat's songs the perfect TikTok dance track, Lennig cites a relaxed multi-layered chorus and rhythmic vocal delivery in verse. When you combine those powerful elements with lyrics that are funny, evocative, very self-deprecating, delivered with great confidence, it adds a tremendous contrast that really helps connect with people, Lennig said. People don't just dance to songs, they feel the lyrics, act them Boss B*tch in particular is sure to make you want to strangle the red carpet, and all TikTok videos feature everyone doing their best version of it, Lennig said. Furthermore, according to Lennig, most of the it has a BPM (beats per minute) of about 126, which makes it the perfect music for dancing — it's not hard to synchronize your body with music. Music expert Jared Gutsstadt told Bustle that Doja Cat was the perfect artist for TikTok, especially in the coronavirus era, because her return to the era before live performances was a big component of how artists evolved. You don't have to be in a live audience to get enveloped by the sound and feel of the music — you can play the Boss B*tch in your living room and be immediately swept into it. It's situational music, and most of the time people listen to this type of music in clubs. And nowadays people are cooped up and want to find distractions through dance and positive output. I think he did a really great job, intentionally or unintentionally, just that, Gudstat told Bustle.Experts:RedOne, Producer, Songwriter.Erich Lennig, Producer, Recording Artist.Jared Gutsstadt, Musicologist, CEO/Founder of Audio Up Doja Cat became a trend on Twitter shortly after the release of the single Nas Ultra Black, the first of his upcoming albums. The song is a testament to Black pride, and it includes a line devoted to the singer Say So, describing it as the opposite of the message of the national anthem. We went 'ultra Black, no apology Black / Opposite of Doja Cat, Nas raps, referring to the May 2020 #DojaCatsOverParty trending hashtag and star controversy that was very online then embroidered in Doja Cat has not responded to the decline of Nas's name, and his team did not immediately respond to an Insider comment request. In December 2019, Doja Cat told Paper Magazine that she frequented chat rooms, but would not mention her name, telling the magazine that people were f—ing crazy and would try to find her. Doja Cat told Paper that people use horrible language and would vote for her in chat rooms, but she said she stayed in it and made offensive jokes. A 2015 Doja Cat track uploaded to SoundCloud called Dindu Nuffin also sparked outrage, due to the phrase used in racist online circles as a sarcastic way to blame victims of police brutality. Critics have suggested that Doja Cat release Dindu Nuffin in response to Sandra Bland's death in police custody. Singer Singer rapper Doja Cat in August 2019. Scott Dudelson/Getty Images After #DojaCatsOverParty became a trend on Twitter, several former members of the Doja Cat chat room actively vouched for his character, saying they never watched him say anything racist, just troll comments. Later, Doja Cat discussed the situation on Instagram, apologizing for any offence she may have caused, but stating that she did not use racist language online, and clarifying that Dindu Nuffin intended to reverse the meaning of the racist phrase - she wrote it was a bad decision to use the term. I've been using public chat rooms to socialize since childhood. I shouldn't have been on some of those chat room sites, but I personally never engaged in any racist conversations. I apologize to everyone that I was offended, wrote the singer. I'm a black woman. Half of my family is Black from South Africa and I am very proud of where I come from, he continued. Doja Cat also said good luck motherf---er to anyone who tried to cancel it during quarantine. In response to Nas's lyrics, many Doja Cat fans defended her, but others justified Nas's right to criticize her While it was unclear what motivated Nas to drop doja Cat's name, it generated a lot of controversy and buzz online. Twitter erupted with discussions about Nas's relevance in 2020, possible justification for criticizing Doja Cat, and accusations about Nas's treatment of women.—🌀 (@slitmyclitt) August 14, 2020In 2018, Nas's ex-wife, Kelis, accused him of physical assault and mental abuse during their famous five-year celebrity marriage. Carman Bryan, Nas's ex-girlfriend and mother of his daughter Destiny, also accused Nas of physically abusing her, alleging that she once hit her so hard that she saw the star. While making the allegations against Nas, Kelis recalled famous photos of Rihanna's injuries following the incident with Chris Brown, as she remembers considering coming forward. At the time, she said she remembered having bruises all over her body from Nas. Kelis and Nas divorced in 2009.Nas denied Kelis' allegations in an open letter on Instagram, writing that he had never beaten a woman and accusing Kelis of verbally abusing her and her daughter, and alleging that Kelis physically abused her as recently as 2018.—Elijah ☐ (@lvveme) August 14, 2020Other Twitter users compared Nas's musical prowess to Doja Cat's, and some celebrated his attacks.—R (@DojaDavonne) August 14, 2020And some suggested that Nas could have attacked an older man (Nas is 46, Doja Cat is 24) like Terry Crews or Kanye rather than dropping pop and hip-hop artists.
