buy, run that company, and then bring it public or sell it? This is where private equity firms - and you, potentially - come in as a private equity firm playing multiple roles during a typical investment. For example: • Raising the fund. Private equity is the centre of private equity. The company raises capital from the different constituencies mentioned above and then manages that capital appropriately until the investment is identified. In addition to the same people who raise capital, visit the Vault Finance Career Channel at www.vault.com/finance-insider CAREER company profiles, bulletin boards, Vault Finance Job Board and more. Library 5 15. The Vault Career Guide for private equity fundamentals also helps to get credit for any leverage required for buyouts. Finally, they manage the payments to all concerned. • Find a target. Companies hire researchers to analyse the activities of thousands of companies in search of possible investments. Sometimes it's easy- many companies readily announce that they are looking at strategic options, business talk to put themselves up for sale. But there are many options in other companies, even those that seem to work just fine. Researchers know the strengths of the different management teams of a private equity firm and are able to identify possible goals based on the company's ability to make even more profit from its strengths. And yet in other cases, the fund may just see a very conservative company underuse its resource-chain casual dining restaurants, for example, that hasn't leveraged the real estate it owns to the extent it could expand. There are many ways to find a target that we will discuss later. • Termination of the transaction. The fund must then contact the company's approach to it and try to make a transaction. This is very similar to the merger and acquisition dance two exchange-traded companies can do. The private equity firm hires a Wall Street investment bank for its advisory firm, although its own cadre of dealmakers and due diligence teams is often as talented as that of an advisory firm. The deal is hammered out, which usually gives the company's current shareholders a premium over the current price per share, giving the private equity firm enough room to make even more impressive profits along the way. Company management. When a private equity firm buys a company, the deal generally disappears from the news, but the hard work is just beginning. The company, which represents new owners, has a plan to maximize profits ready to go-that was part of the targeted and acquisition. Adapted: Quan (miaoquan@gmail.com) Such plans often include a variety of cost-cutting measures, including new management and production processes and redundancies. This also usually involves borrowing quite a bit of money—generally much more than investors in an exchange-traded company would stand for. As a general rule, private equity firms are aggressive managers and leverage is immediately put to work. In recent years, this leverage has also helped to give early payout to investors in the fund — essentially using the company's good name to sell bonds, the proceeds of which are then distributed to the new owners. One of the biggest discussions about private equity is whether THE CAREER 6 LIBRARY © 2008 Vault.com Inc. 16. The private equity sip company has done all the hard work, after all, making it more attractive for a big company to buy. Alternatively, some companies that have just purchased the shares-had speculation that Toys R Us would have been a much more profitable investment if its private equity buyers simply closed the struggling toy retail business and sold all their properties out. Finally, and in particular, the private equity company will reverse it by returning it to the public equity markets through an initial public offering. In general, a company needs to be stronger than it was when purchased private equity investors get good returns, although in some cases, especially hertz's IPO, companies may be overwhelmed with debt. Private investors generally receive IPO income, although in some cases at least part of the income goes to the company itself.
