LLC all rights reserved while everyone loves to beat on Apple Maps - not without justification - none of the existing maps apps are good enough yet. Whether it's data quality or user experience, they're all still making it wrong too often is acceptable, and that needs to change. Apple, for all its data collection, cleanup, and health issues, gets a few things right. The interface, both before and after iOS 7 is not only good looking but also provides a good amount of information about not only your next turn, but then, Sound Directions is also doing a good job of keeping you informed over the long stretch of road, and advising you to stay left or bear right so you are in the right place for an earlier turn and not too late. Unfortunately, while Apple Maps can often take you to the blocks you're going to have, it tends to break down when it comes to the exact location and its entry. Google Maps pegs the data, but it's almost a fault. Less human. This will tell you that you need to turn right without warning you to the right, or tell you to the left when there are three options left, and only to masterfully pass well after the right one. (And lest you think their data is complete, today they told me to pull a u-turn on a dead-end road when I was actually in the middle of a 4-lane highway that only appeared on my way to Mount View. Nokia here maps, TomTom, and anyone who licenses data from them all need to do a better job not only with that data, but also by providing it in a more humane way. Well-approved, constantly providing a place that not only will tell you where to turn and how to make some places, but make sure you turn in the right place, and helps you get there. Like so many things, if I can somehow mash Apple and Google Maps together, I'd get something close to what I want - big data and a great interface - but that's the option that's no longer there. Now it's a race to see who can look more like the other, the better, the faster. The plans are hard, no doubt about it. But missing is nonsense. What is a reasonable level of experience? If you miss an innings, or are sent the wrong way, how often too often? Georgetown is one of the country's top universities, with an equally hardworking and hard-to-party student body. Founded in 1789, it was america's first Roman Catholic university. Striking Hoya From Latin Saxa Hoya, 'What a Stone') alumni include Bill Clinton, as well as many international royals and heads of state. Near the east gate of the campus, the medieval-looking Healy Hall impressed with its tall, Hogwarts-esque clock tower. The beautiful Dalgren Chapel and its tranquil courtyard are hidden behind it. The country's oldest Catholic and Southern university was founded in 1789 on a hill overlooking potomac and the village of Georgetown. The flagship building, The Flandersy Hall of The Romantick Healy, was completed in 1882 and is a national historic landmark. Its clock tower is 200 feet high, and its main hall, Gaston Hall, has 750 seats and has hosted many visiting world leaders. Other campus highlights include Hayley Gates, the Astronomical Observatory, and Copley Lauen, a popular rallying point for students during hot weather. Air.
