Located about 20 miles north of Albocórq in santa ana's Piublow-east River Grand Valley in Noida County, New Mexico. The land of Piublow covers 79,000 trust and adjacent acres of booking land, most of which is Indivalopad. The tribal government created this Santa Ana Department for Natural Resources (Sadner) in 1996 and is ready to implement and implement natural resource management programs that protect, secure, and enhance natural resources for current and future tribal members. In the years that followed, The Pobelou expansion sadner and developed five core divisions: water resources; Bosque restoration; Range/Wildlife ; Environmental Education & Community Approach; And geographic information system & IT management. This distribution is the primary objective to provide the leadership of The Pobelu with information and options for managing natural resources. The Sadoner Internship Program provides work and training opportunities for Santa AA tribal members interested in career chases in areas related to natural resources. As part of its distribution, Sadner has employed Santa Ana tribal members for environmental monitoring and technical support. Santa Ana Wildlife Corridor Presentation ws1 has become a role model for other tribal communities in how to effectively restore the background tribal and the piublow of Santa Ana in New Mexico and protect wildlife habitat in the Upper Reu Grand. Located south of The Carsan and Santa Fae National Forests to the north of Al-Buqaq, Santa Ana was not always a success story. Thirty years ago, the 79,000 acres parcel that the tribe owned was more motivated by the churches, more and more hunting and off-road vehicles. The Prunghorn and Wild Turkey-two castes which are culturally important to The Pobelou-had disappeared completely from the earth. Tribal leaders knew they had to work immediately so they created a department of natural resources, which uses the best scientific methods to study wildlife, start edifying the improvement of habitat and introducing wild life. He also launched an environmental education and community access program to help young people Be sure how important it is The stoids of the land are perhaps the most important thing that the Tribal Council of Piublow passed a wild life and a cattle code that has limits on hunting and use of car vehicles on the road. The 2005 Wildlife Protection Code is why Santa Ana has achieved so much. The members of the tribal council said we want to protect wildlife and that's exactly what they have done, said Alan Hech, director of natural resources at Santa Ana. We have protected so much and we have increased the wildlife population, he said. We have shared our wildlife protection code with many of our neighbouring tribes and hope that in the end other tribes will find ways to preserve their forest populations as well. Earth managers have restored the grasslands, the wildlands and ripaian areas and successfully resumed the Prunghorn and the wild turkey. They have installed solar-power wells so that wild life is drinking from the warand pan. In addition to Turkey and Prunghorn, the bear, the ayle, the women and the hern now roam the earth in more abundance. The tribe recently purchased a nearby field that includes an additional 60,000 acres of land that they plan to use for traditional purposes, including wildlife management. Even the earth managers in Santa Ana find that improving their land is part of the solution to encourage healthy forest populations. Urban development is pushing us closer. So for large, karshmic castes like the alac, bear, mountain lion, and the hern, they need more contrasting land than the lord of the piublow. That's why migration or movement corridors that have the across jurisdiction stake are very important, said Glenn Harper, Range and Wildlife Division Manager in Santa Ana. Santa Ana Piublow National is home to a couple of forests, state and private land and other tribal communities. The Interstate 25 and American Highway 550-which take some 50,000 cars a day-have become major barriers to the Santa Ana-Piublow border and wildlife migration to the area. Harper and others have established a suicide program of the Kollaaring animals in Piublow so that they can better understand the migration model to cross the earth and determine the best ways to protect these routes. Both Harper and Hich say they are fond of seeing how the newly approved state law could benefit the corridors moving near Piublow to protect corridors. They are also hoping that land managers in nearby Carson and Santa Fae National Forests will be designated as several special administrative areas to protect corridors and their habitats within. It is very important for Piublow to protect and improve its ground and water quality. We've changed here to help renovate the earth to be more motivated to change climate conditions, Harper said. But we can't do it in isolation. to a real The impact of a land renovation scale, our neighbors— whether it's other tribal communities, private land owners or federal and state land managers—need to be proactive in protecting migration corridors and improving their wildlife habitat on their land.
