In 1983, social security changes included a future payment plan for most Medicare inpatient services in the United States. The purpose of the payment plan was to control rising health care costs by paying a flat amount per patient. The DRG compensation programme was based on the assumption that similar medical diagnoses would incur similar costs to hospital. Therefore, all patients who are admitted for surgical procedure, such as hernia repair, would be charged the same amount regardless of the actual cost of the hospital. If a patient's hospital bill should be a total of less than the amount medicare paid, the hospital is allowed to maintain the difference. However, if the patient's bill is more than reimbursed by Medicare for a specific diagnosis, the hospital must cover the difference in cost.
