About Pokemon Trading Card Game Released: 1996 Players: 2 Complexity Rules: Medium Strategic Depth: Medium Publisher: Wizards of the Coast There are rare Pokemon cards – the kind you might get excited to find from time to time in a booster pack – and then there are rare Pokemon cards. Those highly prized books of which only one hand still exists - or ever existed - and which may be worth thousands, tens of thousands or even hundreds of thousands at auction in the right state. Realistically speaking, there is a good chance that the Pokemon book collection in the attic does not include one of the rarest cards ever made for the game. I'm sorry to disappoint you. The most sought-after Pokemon cards tend to be promotional versions available at certain tournaments or other events decades ago, so even if you're amazingly lucky opening boosters, you probably shouldn't expect to suddenly cash in and retire on the back of the card binder. Rare Pokemon Cards Who said, there are a number of rare Pokemon cards that were more widely available at the time and that can be hidden in a confident fan's library, waiting to be rediscovered. Interest in Pokemon and The Pokemon card game has only continued to grow in recent years, with multiple auction card sales setting new records in 2019 and 2020 alone, so there's never been a better time to go through your collection and see if you own one of the rarest Pokemon cards of all time. Aren't you even a little curious? 1. No. 1 Trainer Answer to What is the rarest Pokemon book of all time? With only seven copies considered to exist, the No. 1 Trainer may well be the rarest Pokemon book ever made. It's unlikely you've heard of The No. 1 Trainer, and extremely unlikely you've ever seen a copy in person. When it comes to rare Pokemon cards, they really don't get it less often than this. No.1 Trainer is a holographic promotional book awarded to the finalists of the Secret Super Battle tour held in Tokyo, Japan in 1999. To a place in the final of the competition, which took place in a secret location, players had to first win a regional tournament. Their prize was the No. 1 Trainer card, which gave them access to Final. To view this content, please enable targeting cookies. The text of the card translates to: The champion of the official Pokemon Card Game tournament is recognized here, and this honor is praised. By presenting this book, you can obtain a preferential entry into the Secret Super Battle. The card has the Japanese logo for Pocket Monsters Trading Card Game, along with artwork from the original generation Pokemon Mewtwo by illustrator Hideki Kazama. As only seven regional tournaments have taken place, it is believed that only seven copies of the new 1 Trainer card have been made – easily making one of, not, the rarest Pokemon cards in existence. Six of the cards have since been certified as being in perfect condition Gem Mint 10, with a flawless copy of the auction in July 2020 for $90,000. At the time, Heritage Auction - which organized the sale - described the No. 1 Trainer as the most sought-after card in Pokemon TCG, and a Holy Grail for collectors. Its No.2 Trainer and No. 3 Trainer counterparty cards, awarded similarly to the winners of Japanese Pokemon tournaments in the late 1990s, are almost as rare and valuable. 2. 1999 The first edition of Shadowless Holographic Charizard #4 A very valuable version of a classic fan-favorite Shiny Charizard has always been in demand, but its shadowless version is also extremely rare. Shiny Charizard has been one of the most popular cards in Pokemon card game since it was first released in 1999, so it's no surprise that 20 years from now, it remains one of the most sought-after books for collectors and fans alike. While a number of first edition cards from Pokemon TCG's early days are worth some money – assuming they're still in good nick – due to their limited availability and age, this specific version of Holographic Charizard absolutely stands out as one of the rarest and most valuable Pokemon cards ever released. A PSA 10 Base Set 1st Edition Charizard just sold at auction with a final bid of $183,812.00 through @IronicAuctions. Including the buyer's premium of 20%, the total value of the transaction exceeds $220k. From now on, this is the largest known sale of the card. pic.twitter.com/2mwkoopTVL— Cardhops (@Cardhops) October 10, 2020 To view this content, please enable targeting cookies. What sets the card apart is the lack of a shadow under the Pokemon that breathes fire. This was a print error that was corrected for most of the printed cards, making the shadowless card all rarer. According to auction house Ironic Auctions, the rare book is the Holy Grail of Pokemon cards, the most iconic and book for both the Pokemon franchise and its die-by fans. A shadowless, troubleless holographic Charizard from mint, sold at auction in October 2020 for a whopping $220,574 for the retired rapper - and Pokemon fan - Logic, setting a new record for Already valuable card, depending on card game card socket Cardhops. The figure can even make Charizard without the shining shadow the most valuable Pokemon book of all time - a title disputed by our next entry. Anyway, it is undoubtedly one of the rarest Pokemon cards out there. 3. Pikachu Illustrator Extremely expensive, extremely rare Pikachu Illustrator is often considered the most valuable Pokemon card of all time, and is also among the rarest Pokemon cards in existence. Picture: The invaluable current record holder for the world's most valuable Pokemon card is also one of the rarest Pokemon cards ever made. Pikachu Illustrator was originally given to the winners of promotional competitions organized in 1997 and 1998 by the Japanese magazine CoroCoro Comic. 39 copies were officially awarded to the winners, while two copies were later discovered by one of the creators of the card game, apparently bringing the total number of Pikachu Illustrator copies to 41. Over the age of 70, the card is unique in many ways. It's the only Pokemon card to say Illustrator instead of Trainer at the top of the card, and it has a one-off pen icon in its bottom right corner to recognize its creation for the design contest. The artwork of the pikachu card is by Atsuko Nishida, the original illustrator of fan-favorite Pokemon. To view this content, please enable targeting cookies. There are still about 19 copies of the card, with 10 certified by the Professional Sports Authenticator (PSA) responsible for classifying the status of the cards - although the actual number there is disputed. An almost flawless copy of the card classified at Mint 9 - a grade in perfect condition - sold at auction in 2019 for $195,000. That makes it the most expensive Pokemon card ever sold at auction according to Guinness World Records, though it may have been surpassed by the shadowless Charizard. Regardless, Pikachu Illustrator is among the rarest Pokemon cards, the priceless auction house calling it the most valuable and rarest Pokemon card in the world. 4. 20th Anniversary 24-karat Gold Pikachu A rare book of solid gold Book is a reprint of the original Pikachu game, made of solid 24-carat gold. Photo:Nintendo/Creatures Inc./Game Freak While many of the rarest Pokemon cards are cards released in the early years of the game, this card is an exception in that it first appeared just a few years ago, in 2018, to celebrate the 20th anniversary of The TCG. What makes the Pikachu card on its 20th birthday very special is that it's made of solid gold. 11 grams of 24-carat gold, actually. The Japanese manufacturer of Ginza Tanaka has produced a limited number of solid gold cards based on the original Japanese Pikachu card - affectionately nicknamed Fat Pikachu thanks to the electric mouse's chubby cheeks. The only way to get a copy of the golden pikachu was to participate in a lottery held in 2018. If you won, you were given the chance to buy a copy of the limited edition card for 216,000 yen - or around £1,700. It came in a special setting and anniversary marking box, which you would hope might keep safe, given the price tag and rarity. Although the card recreates the original Pikachu card - including the Pocket Monsters Card Game logo on the back and its Japanese text on the front - it is not legal for tournament use. You know, because it's made of gold. We probably wouldn't recommend trading in the schoolyard either, unless your friend has a couple of thousands in pocket money. 5. Master's Key A more recent book – but not less rare Master's Key is one of the rare Pokemon cards that do not date back to the early days of TCG. Pictured: PWC Master's Key is another rare Pokemon card awarded to participants in a Pokemon TCG tournament. However, unlike the No. 1 Trainer and its ilk, this book is a little more recent, given the competitors in the 2010 Pokemon World Championships held in Hawaii. Both those participating in the trading card tournament and his video game counterpart received a copy of Master's Key - the cards were identical, but they came presented in a different trophy case frame, depending on the category. To view this content, please enable targeting cookies. It is estimated that there are only 36 copies of the card - equal to the number of participants in all age divisions of the world championships. A copy of the Master's Key card sold at auction in November 2019 for more than $21,000, highlighting how valuable the prize card is infrequently. 6. Raichu Prerelease A card so rarely can only be fact rumor or fiction? Raichu prerelease may be the rarest Pokemon book of all time - if that is real, that is. Image via PokeGym Perhaps the most controversial Pokemon card of all time. Prerelease Raichu may also be the rarest Pokemon card ever made – in fact, it is so rare that finding out exact details is difficult. Raichu Prerelease has long been rumored to be a printed error card within up to the English version of Pokemon TCG's second expansion, Jungle, in 1999. So the story goes, a very small number – told about 100 – of Raichu cards from the basic set of the game were accidentally reprinted with the word Prerelease stamped at the bottom right of the book artwork. The game's English producer, Wizards of the Coast, destroyed all the specimens, but a fraction of the children, leaving 10 or fewer in the wild, believes that the few remaining copies were given to Wizards of the Coast personnel. For years, Prerelease Raichu was just rumored to exist until a copy believed to have appeared from a former Wizards of the Coast employee in 2006. In 2009, the first recorded and apparently only sale of a Raichu was reported by the pokeGym fan site, apparently changing hands for $10,500. However, given the completion date of April 1, whether the sale was real or an elaborate April Fool joke remains dubious. If Prerelease Raichu actually remains in dispute - no copy of the card has even been professionally certified or sold at auction, despite a series of apparent fakes popping up over the years. If a legitimate copy of the card were to surface, it could set a new record for the most valuable and rarest Pokemon card of all time. Until then, it will remain a true Holy Grail. Grail.
