Choosing from the nu-metal memories of Garden of Delete, Age Of—produced in part by electro-soul auteur James Blake—has solid, almost baroque qualities, with a touch of medieval music (Stesen, Myriad.Industries), hymns (Amaran), and bits of pastoral atmosphere (Toy 2), offsetting the avant-garde with an instinct for melody and play that always sets Lopatin music aside. Most interesting—and unexpected—was Lopatin's players into conventionally structured, vocal-based songs (Babylon, Black Snow, featuring ANOHN), which brought her music to the brink of familiarity without ever settling in. Listen to the album's title track under After lending a goal-scoring finesse to Safdie's brother who was recognized by Good Time last year, Oneohtrix Point Never (a.k.a. Daniel Lopatin) has lifted the curtain on a new solo LP. Titled Age Of, the album will arrive June 1 through Warp. Thirteen tracks long, it stood as a follow-up garden until 2015's Garden of Delete. You can find apple-worship eerie artwork above. In addition, you can hear the title track from the record in the treler for the upcoming Myriad Lopatin show below. A send-off from Lopatin on social media revealed that the Age Of was contracted from 2016 to 2018. The album can now be found to pre-order in CD, vinyl and digital format here. Beyond his work as Oneohtrix Point Never, Lopatin's latest collaborators have included David Byrne, Ishmael Butler of Shabazz Palace and Ryuichi Sakamoto.
