The CHE report for 2018 says that the increase in graduate earnings in Indiana has exceeded the cost of college for several years. While no degree guarantees a specific career or salary, the data show that higher levels of degrees correspond to higher earnings. The table below illustrates this trend across the country. Annual full-time wages and educational achievement salaries in the U.S. are less than a high school diploma associate degree of $28,756 $37,960 $44,824 Source: BLS Annual full-time salary and salary for educational achievements in the U.S. A Bachelor's degree in PhD $62,296 $74,568 $94,900 Source: BLS Prospective Students should carefully consider how they intend to fund their higher education. Students can reduce the overall cost of obtaining a degree by seeking financial assistance from independent organizations and the government. At least one-third of government graduates Government aid benefited from 2008 to 2015, according to the CHE report for 2018. The cost of a college depends on the type of institution and whether a student is eligible for Training. The table below compares the average training rates in Indiana with the national average. Average student tuition and fees: Public colleges and universities in the state of tuition outside the state tuition National Average $7,924 $20,061 $9,037 (in the state) $25,657 (out of state) average tuition Students and fees: Private colleges and universities tuition outside the state Tuition National Average $32,338 N/A$30,731 Source: National Center for Education Statistics Cost Review for online students in Indiana figures higher just for tuition and fees. However, students often have to pay other educational expenses. The list below highlights potential fees for students at a distance. Technology Charges: Some online programs charge online students flat or annual technology collection. This fee often funds IT assistance and personal learning tools. Mandatory travel: Many degree programs require internships or practices that may include travel costs. Cost of living: Some distance education programs require online students to meet campus accommodation requirements, which can lead to the cost of housing and transportation. Evening and Weekend Training: Tuition fees may be higher for evening and weekend classes. Students should check the cost of tuition before enrolling in classes. Textbooks and educational resources: Online students usually have to pay for physical or digital textbooks and other educational resources. Indiana Students often pay lower tuition fees than their students. Some schools charge state tuition fees for all online students, regardless of residency status. Students should check with each prospective school admissions or financial aid office for learning information. State exchanges and reciprocity agreements may also qualify out-of-state students at a discounted tuition. Indiana participates in the Midwest Student Exchange Program, which offers lower tuition rates for students in participating states who attend participating Indiana schools. CHE provides additional information on interstate reciprocity agreements, including details of the state's reciprocity agreement.
