Technical data may change without notice. Ion audio is a lesser-known and new niche company that caught our eyes because they produce larger portable weather speakers that are more parallel to traditional box speakers, while most wireless outdoor speakers on the market are much more compact and are meant to be transported easily in a handbag or otherwise. The iPA76A is their flagship outdoor speaker, and its unique specifications and features definitely make it something that appeals to many people who don't have too many other similar competing products. [easyzon_image align=center height=300 identifier=B00SNBCBBY locale=US src=tag=outdoorspeakersreview-20 width=234] It's a standalone unit that can actually be wheeled like a suitcaseSpecsSpeaker type: ActiveWirelessNominal power handling: Not specified by manufacturerPeak power handling: 50 wattsImpedance: N/A Sensitivity: not specified by manufacturerFrequency response range: 65 – 20,000 Hz (+/- 3dB)Unit weight: 23.25 lbsUnit dimensions: 11.0 x 15.0 x 17.25 inches (depth x width x height)Battery Life: Up to 50 hoursSignal Type/Range: Bluetooth, up to 100 ftWarranty: 90 days (does apply to purchase from Amazon.com – full info here)User manual and spec sheet: click hereReview and DiscussionThe Block Rocker is distinctly unique product in the outdoor audio market because it's a seeming step-up from your run of the mill wireless all weather speaker, which is generally smaller, hand-held, and less powerful. iPA76A has a 50W power treatment, but this is a little misleading because the manual as a matter of fact clarifies that this is peak power. The meter that matters primarily is the continuous/nominal power that speakers can actually perform in the long run, while peak power processing is an absolute maximum intended for short periods only Bursts. Reputable sound companies usually define both, but sometimes they don't – the general rule of thumb is that it's safe to assume that the nominal power of the speakers typically works at about 30% of its peak power processing. However, the 15W continuous power is still very good for an outdoor speaker with wireless features – most such handheld units are single digits because the speaker's power is usually limited by its physical size. The answer area is decent, but not the starry sky – you don't get quite as strong a bass as powered outdoor speaker, but it's an impossible task anyway. What does it look like – a bit like the strongest guitar? Decent enough, but we are not personally huge stickers to aesthetics. Although not quite as handy as a hand speaker that can be put in a handbag, it has a built-in wheel kit and handle to make it easy enough to move. It's on the slightly heavy side, about 25 kilos, so note. It is an inevitable trade-off to increase power. Portable speakers only have a 90-day warranty, which is definitely on the short side (5+ years is pretty standard for higher-end speakers), so you just have to hope it stays intact. Speaking of which, although this is technically an outdoor unit, weather resistance is not available, so be careful when exposing it to any element. The device comes with a rechargeable battery, which the company claims lasts up to 50 hours, which is relatively very good. It can also pair via bluetooth, USB or standard aux. Some unique features are worth mentioning: in addition to the wheel set and carry handle, this device has a built-in radio, USB drive and even microphone. One of the reasons we like it so much is because it's a great choice for anyone who gives an address outside (hence the model title PA, we think) – obviously that's the need for the market, but someone might not think right away. The low three-digit price tag makes this look pretty damn good considering everything that comes with it. Our TakeBottom line: we really like this product, mainly because it's kind of – a larger, more powerful portable speaker with wireless features and an included microphone for those who need a speaker to give addresses outside. We haven't seen many other products like that. The battery life is also fantastic, which we know about with people caring and that they like. Everything also comes at a very reasonable price – cheaper than much higher-end portable portable speakers. If you're looking for something to roll into the trunk, beach party or anything and you don't mind dragging a little, this product seems like a good choice.
