• Smart overalls• Add a friendly size• Dishwasher safe• BPA free• Made in Sweden• Made from biobased plastics Material properties made from GMO without corn bioplastic. Sustainable features reuse, use again, again and again... BIOBASED PLASTICS Biobased plastics have a unique advantage over conventional oil-based plastics in the sense that the composition is wholly or partly made of plants or other biological materials. Biodegradable plastics can also be partially or completely made from plants or other biological materials, but can also be based on fossils. The advantage of biodegradable plastics are substances that can break down in a certain environment, such as compost. Most often, this compost must be carried out in industrial compost. KiwiKlimber TOP 10 REVIEWER REVIEW CORPS +7,316 July 16, 2015 | updated October 20, 2017 Eating dish, which gets the job at a low price. The best backcountry dishes, especially trips with lots of dishes, when the user may need to use a spoon for breakfast, fork for lunch, and both for dinner. This durable tool applies to you. Advantages low price feel finish both in the mouth and in hand It seems that every outdoor retailer carrying them unscramless cookers cons a little longer would be ideal small food bits can easily get stuck in the teeth of teeth serrated edge conditions: I owned and operated these sporks for almost 18 months. I originally purchased a four pack with a gift card that had only a few dollars left on it. I thought why not buy a set of four for general camping and hiking purposes (car camping, day trips, and a few days of hiking). Over the past few months, I've started also using them daily in the office for lunch (they are like a conversation starter in the office). I use them in at least 40 ° F air, and had no problem with fragility, as sometimes can happen with plastic low temps (but 40° F is not all that low) and stirred boiling water with them many times and did not experience any problems. I use the end of the fork most (pasta, lettuce, etc.), but also regularly I use the tip of a spoon (soups, breakfast flakes, hot drinks mixing, etc.) I think I use the edge of the knife too often, especially when on the runway, as I always sharper knife with me. Bright colors are certainly not subtle. Easy to use: The purpose of this dish is to get food from point A (e.g. bowl, cup, pot, frisbee-I'm not the only one who uses frisbee as a plate, right?) to point B (i.e. my mouth) and it achieves this goal consistently. Like a spoon: The end of the spoon is deep enough to cut out a sufficient amount of food, but not too deep, where it is difficult for the lips to wipe the spoon by pulling out of the mouth. The spoon usually works well for mixing needs, except for thick, thinnest dishes. Like a fork: Forks tines are slightly wider than normal forks (normal meaning for those that are regularly used at home and in restaurants here in the US). My assumption is that there are were needed to ensure durability. As regards the wider values, neither defects nor benefits. Like a knife: the knife (or serrated edge of the fork, as it is) is a little complicated. Although it works well enough (I remember the first time using it I cut two chicken breasts and had no problems), it takes a little more concentration and effort rather than cutting with a reasonably sharp pocket knife or semi-decent kitchen knife. Although at first I thought that the serration of the edge of the fork would bother me when I put the fork in my mouth, in fact it is completely inconspicuous. When the knife lets me down, some food particles fall into the serrations and they can't budge until the knife is washed off with water. It's not a problem when eating in the office and the sink is nearby, but when there are precious resources on the trail and water, I hate wasting water in order to displace food particles. You may need to take a close look to see the food particles, but they are. Construction & Longevity: I have four of these sporks, so I turn over them every day and haven't had any longevity issues whatsoever. When throwing them into a walking package I usually cover a fork ending with some kind of cloth that wouldn't catch the tines on the lining of my pack (especially when stored in the upper zip mesh pocket of my Osprey Talon 22 daypack). Mouthfeel is especially beautiful. Plastic is not only a normal fast food restaurant quality plastic, it looks like it has a more textured, sanded fastening coat, which is pleasant both in the hand and in the mouth. Plastic is heat resistant (not fire resistant), so mixing hot liquids or foods does not have melting or clipping problems. This also means that the dishwasher is safe. Plastic is also safe to use on non-stick cooking surfaces such as JetBoil GCS (to view the future) that I use. The length can be a little longer for me. Part of this reason is because the longer, the easier it reaches and the bottom of the bag cooking pot. In addition, my hands are quite large, so small dishes feel especially small in my hand. Light My Fire doesn't produce a great version of this spork that is more than 3 inches longer, but I don't think you should buy those because these work well. Recommendation: For the cost, it is worth it. Utilizing their four pack for about 18 months now, and in the last few months using one almost every day for lunch, they shine in the areas of durability and versatility (plastic utensils anyway). Although titanium utensils are definitely stronger, they are also much more expensive, especially if you need to buy four at a time. With both a spoon and a fork in the same container, these spores go with my wife and I on every trip. Update (03/2017): After 20 months of this initial review, I continue to use them almost daily, through them as I eat my lunch at work. During that time, signs of great fragility were seen and eventually it was in half. Another broke tine while trying to spear food, but I still use it sans one tine. The two are still in excellent working condition, but now I am considering upgrading to titanium version of the same product. Update (10/2017): Three of the four sporks are now corrupted and unfit. Since then, I've purchased two titanium spores and reviewed them here. In short, I recommend a version of titanium through the plastic version. Source: bought a new paid price: $6 for a 4-pack 4-pack
