I think this kind of misinformation can be dangerous about u.S. undergraduate institutions. There is no need for a GPA minimum of 2.75 to graduate a GPA below 3.0, not considered shocking by most people, and a GPA of between 3.0 and 3.5 is certainly not below average. My solution to this problem is to curse your proper confidence: what you wrote above is kind of true, but you assume that every university is based on a GPA system, like students will rate quite a lot (on the bell curve). There are many universities that rate it in absolute marks. At the end of the day, the scoring system is not the same standard as in the United States or other countries, but it's better and there's no reason to curse my fate, and I want to tell you that it appears from your exit that you're not a very happy person after all, and certainly not the person I want to study with.
