Baby blessing ceremony

Celebrate the Birth of Your Baby in a Traditional Way That Wasn't Special We wanted to do something special for our daughter, but the traditional baptism didn't look attractive. We decided to hold many non-traditional spiritual ceremonies on a one-year birthday from families with a wide range of spiritual and religious beliefs, from Jews to Christian scientists to Buddhists. To celebrate his birth and the first year of life, we addressed the sacred traditions of many different cultures and religions and adapted them to meet our own personal beliefs. We called it a blessing ceremony, but it can be called a welcome, naming or dedication. You can perform the ceremony in your own home, in your usual temple/church/house of worship or in any beautiful place. (A Unitarian, Interfaith, or other liberal church may also have more chances but today many religious leaders are open to variety and mixing of traditions). Weather permitted can be kept outdoors in a park or garden. Our daughter was born in the spring, so we were able to hold the ceremony in our backyard. We didn't want the baby to be overwhelmed by a large crowd, so he decided to keep the guest list down by inviting only close family and local living relatives. The number of people you invite really depends on how well your child can respond to groups. I want to keep the ceremony relatively short - no more than forty minutes. Most babies (and many adults) will only still sit for a certain period of time. Also keep in mind your baby's bedtime, feeding time and grumpy time and plan accordingly. You might want to ensinge someone you trust to film the ceremony or take pictures. You will probably be too busy to take any photos yourself, and in this way there will actually be a few shots! I can definitely document the case, so you and your child can remember it for years to come. The truth is, your baby probably won't know what's going on. The ceremony is really more for children than for adults. From time to time our daughter really seemed to understand what was going on, but she spent most of the time working in the garden and then slept right at the opening of the gifts. Now that he's big, he still has his special day viewing of photos and videos. He enjoys knowing that all these people are gathered to celebrate the fact that he is in their lives. We've chosen a close family friend to preside over the ceremony. While he is an excellent speaker and walks a spiritual path. If you want someone to preside over your ceremony, you can choose an interfaith or non-denominational pastor or anyone who is special to you. After a short keynote speech, his father said what his name means and how Chose. Some of our family members are Jewish, so a cousin presented him with a Hebrew name and read a short Hebrew prayer. Then his father read one of Shakespeare's sones, and I read an excerpt from Sylvia Plath's poem Three Women. There are many poems that are appropriate, such as Wordsworth's Infant Joy or something from Robert Fulghum's book from beginning to end: The Rituals of Our Lives. There is also a beautiful piece by Kahil Gibran (On Parenting), but you can read something of special importance. After readings, he baptized her with water from the Ganges River in India, which is considered sacred. In various ancient cultures, another way to honor someone is to wash or take their feet. Your ceremony may also include lighting a candle or lighting incense. His father and I had prepared a series of parental vows that we promised to protect, guide and love him. Then we named her godmother and asked them to promise our daughter that they would support our family, both as mentors and friends. We also thanked his favorite carer, a close family friend, and gave each of them a special gift. We introduced his five grandparents and four great-grandparents. You can ask your parents or grandparents to say a few things about your ancestors or tell you a short anecdote about who you were when you were a baby. You can also tell the birth or pregnancy story of your baby. Sleeping Beauty (no bad curses) asked others to share any poetry, prayers, special wishes, blessings, advice or symbolic gifts reminiscent of gifts given by fairy godmothers. If you want to include this in your own ceremony, you should add it to the invitation so that guests have time to prepare something if you want. The contributions made by our friends and family were very impressed. His godfather read a sweet, funny poem he wrote. His grandmother made some kind of remarks, and my stepfather read a short blessing. My mother gave Imogen gifts of Nature (like a feather for air, bark for water and so on) and planted a rosewood in our garden. Other symbolic gifts include a guardian angel charm, a ring my late grandfather had made, and a mozel charm (which means luck in Hebrew). The last gift came from Aunt JoJo and consisted of fresh flowers to represent the different qualities (such as darthies for innocence). Another idea is to make a blessing stick or a blessing crown. This is relatively easy - only guests have to write special wishes or messages on stripes with fabric marks. Then tie them to a stick to hold or a crown of flowers for your baby to wear. You can even choose to add a ribbon to each invitation, so even family members Those who can't attend the party will still be able to send their blessings. For small gatherings, guests can create an apartment and pass the baby around the apartment to get little and prosperous every member of the family. (Although all children can process so much contact at the same time - I know the threshold of your own child). For those who are afraid of the idea of being creative and writing their own ceremony, you can get a traditional naming ceremony or christening and add a few non-traditional items or personal touches. Parental vows, or you can ask a minister for advice. I noticed the underlying similarities of many cultures and religions, and it affected my spiritual beliefs. Whatever your own faith, accept that we are all connected and we are all one. You will find that there are a lot of resources for rituals and ceremonies for children – choosing what you like and neglecting the promptness you don't like is not a problem. But remember, because just because it's a ceremony doesn't mean there has to be a serious incident. Don't be nervous and don't take yourself too seriously. Things never go as planned. A few unexpected surprises (as the baby knelt in the middle of the ceremony and slowly bit me on the ankle) are attached. A reason to celebrate and joy the birth of a baby - so relax and have fun. Abby Rose Dalto Baby Blessings and Ceremonies are held for parents who want to introduce new babies to life and soul and welcome their families. This can be a spiritual resentation or talk of wishing for happiness and positivity. Either way, good life, love and health are bestowed on the fertility baby. Multiple abundances can be made. An Oil blessing and, for example, a Rose Blessing with a Candle Lighting Ceremony. Water Bowls or Jugs are a choice to choose from and any Blessing can be added to the Crystal and World Ceremonial Circle, standing in during the celebration for Babies and Parents. Additional Blessing Rituals can be added for an additional cost. Simple BlessingBasit is a simple ceremony where mother and/or godmother/brother/grandparents are delivered to each person as they read the chosen fertility or the baby slowly speaks to the baby's own blessing. (Delivery works depending on the temperament of the minor person.) Rose BlessingPink, White, Yellow and Red Roses are showers on your baby carrying a meaningful and special blessing depending on the symbolism of each color. Each color of the leaves is kept in a separate bowl or basket, and the mother, family, or guests can shower the leaves on the baby while the blessing is spoken. Water The water bowl or jug of your choice filled with pure, blessed water is used to drip on Crown, Hands and Feet with a selected blessing. Fat BlessingBebek blessed with a (hypoallergenic) circle blessed with blessed organic oils, a symbol of infinity (or a sign of your choice, such as a cross or eight infinity symbols shaped side by side). Crown, Eyebrow, Heart, Hands and Feet blessed, each with a certain blessing. Sage BlessingTören area and mother (Optional: Brothers, Godparents and/or Grandparents and/or guests) have their auras cleaned with burning Sage and then cleaned of baby aura and blessed with fertility of old age. This tends to get a little smoky, to be saged in large numbers of people, if to realize outside of a good idea. 4 Directions and 4 Element Ceremonies Four directions (using or without my Crystal and World Ceremonial Circle) are marked with corresponding 4 elements. They are called upon and included in the blessing ceremony. ~East~Air~Spring~Physical~ChildA candle ~South~Fire~Summer~Mental~YouthA bowl or sunlight jug ~West~Water~Fall~~AdultA flower and leaf collection~North~Wind~Winter~Spiritual~Elderly Parents receive a blessing of baby wisdom and cleanliness while the child stands in the circle. A commemorative pliers from the ceremony for the baby are given with a dried flower, a small viable of blessed water, a small feather and a piece of sage used. 4 Directions 4 Element Sample Mother Earth Baby Welcome CeremonyMetaphysics and soil-centered ceremony. The Crystal and World Ceremonial Circle is used for parents to stand inside while holding the baby. With each sage you will get an Aura Cleaning. The oil crown is blessed by the sun, which is used to bless the baby that meets the connection between hands and feet, Earth, Body and Soul and a bowl or water jug of your choice and is used to sprinkle 7 Chakras with special blessings for each. A souvenir crystal and sage are given to the baby as a souvenir. Mother Earth Welcome Sample Candle Lighting Ceremony Parents (grandmother, godmother and siblings) optional) are given candles used to light candles of the baby a simple ceremony. A blessing is sung for each lit candle, and the baby's candle is a souvenir to remember the support given to the welcome of his life. It can be a ritual added as well as another ceremony, blessing, dedication or naming. Example of Candle Lighting Ceremony
