File storage ideas ikea

Working with the same files in multiple places used to be a hassle. You would need to make sure to take the file with you, email it to yourself, or save it in a place you might get to it later. Now there are a number of online file storage and sync services that make your data available on as many computers as you want. Here's a look at five of the best of these services. Earlier in the week, we asked you what services you used to store your files online, or to at least make your data available so you get it everywhere you've been. You responded with lots of great suggestions, and while we expected you to mark Dropbox, we knew this wasn't the only service you're using. Here's a look at the top five, based on your nominations. Making your files available for every Internet-connected device you own has never been easier. There... Read moreDropboxDropbox is clearly the juggernaut of the file storage and synchronization service. The combination of 2GB of free storage only for signing up and huge bonuses for referring friends to sign up and provides an attractive and useful file syncing service that gets the job done and encourages you to spread the word about it. Dropbox delivers your files to you with little hassle on your Mac, Windows, linux system or blackberry, iOS, or Android device, and the service provides public and photo folders that you use to store and share galleries or other files with selected people with or with the world. Dropbox also hosts a wealth of third-party plug-ins and services that integrate with it to expand the features (thanks to the wide-open API), and has great LAN support, so you can change your files on one computer on your home network and another.Box.netBox.net you start 5GB for free. Install the Box Sync app to sync your files to the web and install the mobile apps to access your files on your iOS device, Android device, Blackberry, Touchpad, or Playbook. Otherwise you upload your files to your Box.net account and open them over the web. Download them whenever you want, or use the service as a replacement for (or addition to) other cloud services such as Google Apps. Box.net combines the best things about a file sync service with the best things about a web-based productivity suite. Windows Live SkyDriveWindows Live SkyDrive starts with 25GB for free (and you sync 5GB), and With Live Mesh you sync your local files and folders to your SkyDrive account. If you have a Windows Live account, you already have a SkyDrive account that you use. SkyDrive is especially useful for Windows users, who can configure it to create each folder on their (such as your My Documents folder, for example) automatically sync to the cloud for safe keeping or automatically upload Microsoft Office documents upload Create. You also use SkyDrive and Live Mesh as an external access utility, so you get to files even if they are not synced. SugarSyncSugarSync is probably Dropbox's biggest competition. The service gives you 5GB for free. The service works just as well (if not better) than Dropbox, syncing your files and folders easily from your desktop to the cloud. You can access your data on the go on the web or on your mobile device with the SugarSync apps for iOS, Android, Blackberry, Windows Mobile, and even Symbian devices. SugarSync even aggressively tracks your files' revision histories so you get old versions of files you may have accidentally modified. SugarSync also makes it very easy to stream music, video or other media from your account on the web or other devices, so you can enjoy it everywhere. SugarSync also gives you more control over your files on the web, allows you to open and edit files directly, or password-protect individual files or folders. SpiderOakSpideroak is probably one of the most versatile and flexible solutions for syncing and storing files. The service puts you on the road with 2GB of space and then puts it to the test by not only syncing your desktop, but also files on your mobile device (not only accessing through your mobile device, but also syncing from your device), even files on network shares and external hard drives. Refer your friends, and you get an incredible 1GB referral each, which is more than any of the other services on offer. Connect SpiderOak with your Mac, Windows, or Linux system and download the mobile apps for your iOS or Android device and leave the rest to the service. SpiderOak also tracks review histories and metadata for all your files, so you can see when they were created, uploaded, and modified. Now that you've seen the top five, as always, it's time to put them to the vote. Honorable mentions this week go out to Wuia, LaCie's file sync and storage service available for Mac, Windows, Linux and mobile devices. Free users get 2GB of storage. Also among the runners-up is Minus, a service that used to be a simple image host (and most of its users still use it that way), but has become a full-fledged drag-and-drop file storage and sharing service that is completely free and gives its users 10GB of storage to play with. Do you have anything to say about any of the competitors? Did your favorite miss the cut and want to tell the world about it? Let's hear it in the comments below. You Alan Henry, the author of this post, reach out on alan@lifel hacker.com, or better yet, follow him on Twitter or Google+. 10/09/07 12:30 Need a little go-to storage, but don't you have your own remote server set up? Online storage start-up who.ha$files offers a free 100MB space ($1 per GB per month thereafter) easily assembled from Windows, Mac or Linux. The site offers its own one-step software software connect from Windows and simple but detailed instructions for other systems, with sharing allowed between registered users. Who.ha$files is certainly not the first child on the online storage block, and 100MB may feel a bit cozy these days, but it can easily serve as a fail-safe space for important documents or a way to privately share a few files. If you have a platform support for your mattress and can also use what storage you can hack two Ikea Expedit 5x1 shelving units into a platform storage bed along with two sheets of MDF, a 4x4-inch post, and a pair of floor protectors. Furniture modification weblog Ikea Hackers shares this method for mounting the bed: One expedit unit is used horizontally as is, while the other is cut down to form storage before the end of the bed. MDF is added on top of the two units and the 4x4 post is used in the corner without any storage to propping up that end of the MDF. While this design can be useful if your bed is always in an angle, I think it can be improved by simply using a 5x1 Expedit on each side with the MDF on top. You always have the 4x4 messages in the middle if necessary for stabilization, and you cut into another Expedit section for the foot of the bed.
