Hobby lobby dollhouse lights

I still find myself inside working on projects rather than outside in the garden. We've had snow and rain and it freezes all week and there's a lot to do outdoors. With the inclement weather, I'm back at Blue Farm. I put dollhouse projects on hold while I was working on a Creative Memories scrapbook photo album for my grandson's 7th birthday. He loves the book; even took him to school. He loves the page with photos of his great-grandmother who died in 2013. She was so small, we were surprised she remembered her. He says he dreams of her. So this weekend I'll be at an out-of-town weekend harvest where I'll start a book for the youngest granddaughter, Lily. I've finished Peter Rabbit's irrigation can lamp. I thought you'd like to see the finished product. Check out the link to see how I started assembling the lamp: The nursery chose an LED chip for the light because of its size. These little lights turn off an incredible amount of light. I wonder if I'd like more white light. I ordered them from this website: Model Trains Software.com. The only problem I see with the use of these battery-rated lights is to hide the battery and switch. I'm going to mount the battery and turn on the bottom of the little chest of drawers where the lamp will sit. (Interestingly, the company is located in La Porte, CO, not far from where I live. There's not much in La Porte, so I wonder exactly where this place is and can I buy there?) At the end of the nursery post, I was struggling to create a decent screen and get it to stick. After some failures, I finally managed to make a shadow. Instead of using a clear plastic disc as the base for the lamp, I cut one from a heavy cardboard. He seemed to stay in his best place, I applied white glue around the edge of the disc where the screen will be connected. I also changed the light, using an LED chip instead. It gives a yellow glow and fits in place better than the 12-volt bulb. I found the screen pattern on Pinterest, copy it and paste it into a Microsoft Word where I was able to adjust the size. It took some impressions to get the size I wanted. I used a jewelry find to finish off the screen, giving it a finished look. Here is the kit, which is very easy to assemble. The website even provides a very good video if you are like me, a handy/show me how to learn. 12 Volt, Another Lighting Option I have made several of these lamps using rotated wooden studs that I buy for the package in Hobby Lobby. (I have the lamp sitting on a double sticky scrapbook disc to hole firmly in place for photography). The screen pattern comes from Dollhouse Miniature Furniture Tutorials: in mini inches. You can scroll the list of projects to find your lamp tutorials. This is fabric so to give it body, I applied Modge Podge to harden the The material matches the bedding on one of the beds I'm going to use in the corner of the second floor. I like the results. This 12-volt lamp will be connected to a power strip that connects to a power outlet or the end of the plug can be removed and the lamp is wired directly into the tape wiring I installed in the house. The downside of this plug is trying to hide it. I'm thinking about that. I made this shade of the wallpaper lamp to match the two rooms in the hallway. This chandelier (shown backwards) is another battery LED light. I haven't found a place in the dollhouse yet. I have to get used to the yellow LED light. I need a light for the third-floor hallway. This room will be double as a sewing room. Inspired by Cinderella Moments, I borrowed her idea to create a hanging light similar to a Mason jar. I used the LED chip light to turn it on. It will hang in the center of the back of the corner of the room where the sewing machine will be. Tim Holtz has a good collection of mini jars. The jar I used for my light came from Michael's miniature collection, not Idea-ology. You can also find them in hobby lobby, with the miniatures of the dollhouse. 3 are coming to a package. This 12-volt light barely fits in the bottle, so I used the LED light. I think next time I order the LEDs, I'll ask for white lights. I use the jewelry finds for the top and I stick them. I kept the cork topper in the light I made, but I can leave it out next time. Just experiment and play to get things the way you like them or to make them work the way you want them to. Be brave and adventurous. I like to make lights and lamps to save money so I can waste other things I can't do or don't want, like cute realistic figures. Miniature clothes I love clothes. I have several in the royal house where I keep sacred memories, a small doll, a Christmas tree, so when I see the miniaturists make clothes of all kinds of tapas and tapas, like 1-inch minis, I'm tempted to make some, but I changed my mind when I found these at Michale's the other day. They are made by Tim Holtz, his line of Ideas and Ology. They're perfect. Not very scale of 1 and the toppers are not entirely squared. They come 2 to a package for about $8. After finding the clothes in the store, I visited their website and found these clothes. I was tempted to order them online, but I found it in Hobby Lobby. 4 to one pack, 2 sizes are coming. They're not 1" scale either, but they'll work. I've been collecting mini figures that are very delicate and will need additional protection. I can paint the cork bottoms to look more wood or even gold. So I'm having fun this week. I hope you try your own hand to make something for your dollhouse. I'm very proud to have six followers. Thank you. Thank you, too, for leaving sweet and encouraging comments. Page 2 Home - Home ?
