You have the right to request termination of probation or supervised release period under the following circumstances.: • After you have served at least one year of supervision, your lawyer may ask a judge or, • After serving half the period of supervision, you may request early termination through an agent appointed in the U.S. Probation Agency case. If you are convicted of a crime or a crime or have a history of violence, your case will not be considered for early termination. Q. I have a relative or friend who is about to get out of prison who has been convicted in another county or state but now wants to reside in the Arizona area. How can I move my case? Answer He should request the transfer of supervision through your case manager to a prison agency, called the Bureau of Prisons Case Manager. When the head of the case makes an inquiry, the probation office will conduct an investigation to determine whether the offender's case can be passed and the offender will report his determinations to the prison agency. The transfer of jurisdiction was carried out only with the approval of the precinct, which would receive and oversee the offender. Q: If I'm convicted of a federal offense, can I, or may not have, owned a firearm? Response Under the law, a person found guilty of a crime is prohibited from possessing a firearm 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1). Si algún pariente o cualquier persona que resida en la misma residencia con el sentenciado tienen armas de fuego, esto podría constituir posesión presuntiva del arma, lo cual podría ser una violación de las leyes federales.
