The newton movie theatre

Cinemas United States New Jersey Newton Newton Theatre 6 people prefer this theater The Newton Theatre opened on May 15, 1924, with 1,000 seats. In 2002, a 2/9 Robert-Morton pipe organ was installed because the original was long gone. Built for the small town of Newton, the now twinning theatre showed films until it closed on October 21, 2007. Renovations were carried out and newton theatre reopened on 16 May 2008 in the first screening and in the classic films. Majestic-Star Entertainment unfortunately closed in in September 2010. Purchased by the new owners in spring 2011, it was restored to its one-screen lineup and reopened as a performing arts center on September 9, 2011 with a performance by Todd Rundgren. In 2015, it was equipped with a digital projector, and the films returned in July 2015. Ross Melnick Get Movie Tickets &np; Showtimes We reopened our doors on Friday 17 July 2020! Masurkar. [3] The film stars Rajkummar Rao, Pankaj Tripathi, Anjali Patil and Raghubir Yadav. Produced by Manish Mundra in 2015 under Drishyam Films, known for the film Masa, the film is the second part of Amit Masurkar since his debut film,[5] Sulemani Keeda in 2013. Newton had his world premiere at the 67th Berlin Film Olympics. The film gained worldwide popularity, securing eight nominations at the 63rd Filmfare Awards, including Best Picture (Critics), Best Actor (Critics) for Rao and Best Supporting Actor for Tripathi, while winning the award for Best Picture and Best Story of a Movie Fare. Rao won the Asia-Pacific Screen Award for Best Actor[6] and the Writers won the Best ScreenPlay Award. [7] Newton was also awarded the National Film Award for best film in Hindi. Pankaj Tripathi won a special at the 65th National Film Awards. [8] The film was selected as the 90th Indian entry for best foreign language film. [9] [10] Plot Nutan Newton Kumar (Rajkummar Rao), a novice government official in the reserve, is sent on election duty to the Naxal-controlled city in india's Chhattisgarh rebel jungles, when one of the main duty officers is found to have heart problems there. Central Reserve Police (CRPF) Security Forces led by Deputy Commander Aatma Singh Singh Tripathi) and the looming fear of guerrilla attacks by communist rebels, he tries his best to hold a free and fair vote despite the odds piled up against him. He's disappointed when voters don't show up for the election. Later, when a foreign journalist shows up at a polling station, the CRPF forces villagers in the constituency to vote. When one of them enters the voting booth, he understands the voting machine and how it works. After talking to the property, Newton soon realizes they have no idea what the election is all about. Some thought they would make money from this, while others hopelessly asked that they were being adequately paid for their work. He's desperately trying to train them, but to no avail. Taking charge of a frustrated Aatma Singh pushes Newton aside and shames villagers by telling them that these officers have risked their lives to vote and should not turn them away. He tells them that the voting machine is a toy; there are elephants, cycles, etc. So even if they vote for their favorite symbol instead of politicians who have never heard, a foreign journalist gets good news about Indian democracy. Newton wants to sit in the voting room for a certain period of time, but is forced to flee because of the Naxal ambush, which he later realizes the CRPF staged. Having received such information, he tries to escape his escort team back to the polling booth, but is caught on both sides and is heavily taken back to safety. On the way back, Newton decides to collect the votes of four villager who suddenly appear deep in the woods. Aatma Singh is reluctant to let them do that. Here, the film gives the viewer a dilemma in war-torn areas through two men who have no rivalry whatsoever, who are inclined to their duty, but still a sharp difference, exposing the dilemma of truth. Newton takes his responsibilities seriously and steals Aatma Singh's rifle and holds the officer at gunpoint until the villagers vote. Singh commented with frustration that he did not want to poll in a region that was only secured by government forces six months ago, citing the fact that there are still more landmines than men. He tells Newton he doesn't want to lose any more troops, especially since the government can't even supply them with the nightly glasses they've been asking for for two years. Newton will also keep him at gunpoint after voting on the remaining two minutes of his official duties (until 3 p.m.). He was beaten in frustration by CRPF forces. The film ends with a picture of the area six months later, and it shows mining. Aatma Singh can be seen shopping in a civilian dress wife and daughter during the holidays, suggesting that he is human and the conditions in Naxal-infested areas made him a dispassionate and cynical person. Newton can be seen in his office as a neck brace for beating his injury, but otherwise happy and in his old ways. He is visited by local election official Malko (Anjali Patil), who asks him what happened after he leaves because he is unaware of the events and Newton asks him to tell everything over tea, but not until five minutes later, when Newton's planned lunch break begins. On Rotten Tomatoes, Newton has an approval rating of 90% based on 10 reviews, with an average rating of 8.2/10. [11] On Indian film review collector site The Review Monk, Newton scored 7.5 out of 10 average scores based on 23 reviews. [12] Rajeev Masand graded the film at 4 stars out of 5 and said Newton is relevant and timely without being boring or unattainable. You could say that it is ultimately too thick in its message or that the pace occasionally slides. But these are small nigglings that never dent the effect of its thrust. [13] Neil Soans of The Times of India gave the film a rating of 4.5 stars out of 5, saying: Newton has dared to take the issue that our vast majority turn a blind eye to and slap us away from our blissful ignorance. Laughing, it makes you think what - and we need to be reminded of this - is what a good movie should do. Both your funny bones and gray cells thank you for looking at it. Soans praised the performances of the actors - especially Rao and Tripathi - and the script by Masurkar and Tewar. [14] Suhani Singh of India Today stated 4 stars out of 5 for the film and said newton is a dark comedy that gives you just as much fear and disappointment as well as hope and hilarity. It makes you see the pitfalls of a democratic system, but also tells you that it is the only one capable of positive this is reality at its best, with credible performances and wallpapers that immerse viewers the world and where even the faces of the background characters leave a heartbreaking impression. [15] Shubhra Gupta of The Indian Express voted the film 4 stars out of 5, saying: Director Amit V Masurkar and screenwriter Mayank Tewari have created a strong black comedy. It's as sharp and subversive as the classic Jaane Bhi Do Yaaro, and while it's completely sober, it just leaves us with a slightly better feel for ourselves. He also praised the actors' performances, saying: Rajkummar Rao enjoys a purple patch. After Bareilly Ki Barf, he sews up another big show full of little things: blinking, thinking, doing things. He's the most interesting when he's quiet: he makes us watch. Pankaj Tripathi, head of the secret forces, cynical but doing his best, is also lovely. For once, the talented Pail has been well used, and in the case of Raghubir Yadav, he gives us another standout act after Peepli Live, a lesson in how to immerse yourself effortlessly in your role. [16] Rohit Vats of the Hindustan Times gave the film a rating of 4 stars out of 5 and said: It's one of the finest political sa teams we've seen in the last couple of years. It refrains from taking sides and offers humorous twists and turns for the state versus the Maoists in a bloody battle. It raises questions about the importance of the electoral system, which we are so proud of. It takes us much further than we see. The team of Rajkummar Rao, Pankaj Tripathi, Raghubir Yadav and Anjali Patil have come up with a top performance. Newton received a warm response at its premiere at the Berlin Film Festival. [18] It also won the CICAIE Award for Best Picture in the Forum Division. The Huffington Post wrote: Newton is a touching, personal and very human film about the strength of one very determined novice election official to maintain a democratic process in an area threatened by rebels. [19] Newton was india's official award at the 90th Annual Academy Awards. [20] It was also the first Indian film to receive an Rs 1 crore grant from central government. [21] Release Newton had its world premiere at the Berlin International Film Festival from 9 to 19 February 2017 in Berlin, Germany[22], while in India it was released on 22 September 2017. [23] At the box office, Newton produced RS 11.75 net in its first week in India. [24] The film produced Rs 3.75 Rs 3.75 crore in its second weekend, taking the total to 15.50 crore. [25] It was a box office success and is considered one of the most profitable films of 2017. Controversy following the release of the film and its election as India's Oscar nominee, Newton was criticized for its striking similarities to the Iranian film Secret Ballot. In defence, filmmaker Anurag Kashyap expressed his support for Newton's team, stating that Newton is equally a copy of the Secret Ballot The Avengers is Watan Ke Producer and Secret Ballot further clarified that Newton is not a copy of his film. Anurag Kashyap started an online discussion with the producer of Secret Ballot Marco Müller, stating that plagiarism is not even a touch. Kashyap then asked for permission and shared a screenshot of the conversation on his Facebook account. Later, babak Payami, the director of the Iranian film, said in an online interview that he saw the film and there was no sign of plagiarism. These are completely different movies. [26] Other commentators have noticed a similarity between the official poster of the film and Satyajit Ray's film Ganashatru.
