The shortest words are A, me and O. They are the only one-letter words recognized in English, and O is an interjection that is often spelled oh. It may seem like there are endless words in the English language, but most dictionaries hover around 250,000 to 300,000 entries, and thousands of those words are obsolete. One of the smallest word categories in English is two-letter words. There are a few more than 100 of them, and many are abbreviations or abbreviated versions of longer words. That said, two letter words are some of the most popular in English. They are the glue to our sentences and phrases, and it is impossible to speak or write without them. As popular as they are, most people take them for granted. If, that, is, in, even do are two letters words that we use every day, but do you know what they really mean? Copyright © 2021 InfoSpace Holdings, LLC, a System1 Company Picture: Sean Gladwell/Moment/Getty Images There are so many alphabetical antics in the English language it has its own field of study called logology. Some of the more obscure recreational linguistics are anagrams, palindromer, aptigrams, antigrams, tautonyms, lipograms and semordnilapse. You'll find a couple of them in this quiz, but this quiz is all about isograms, which are words that don't have any repeated letters. An isogram can also mean a word that has the same number of each letter, but this quiz will focus on the simpler of the two definitions. The English language is full of isograms and it's just a nice term for defining an average word, like the word word. Most one-syllable words don't have repeated letters, but when you march into two- and trestaviga territory, it becomes quite difficult to create a word without any repeated letters. An isogram (which is an isogram in itself) is usually used in recreational puns, but it is also useful in cryptology and ciphers, as it is easy to assign a value to each letter knowing that it will only appear once in the word. A 10-letter isogram, for example, can be used to represent the numbers 1 - 10 (10 is usually 0), and this is usually employed when sellers negotiate sales prices. So here's a hot tip: the next time you negotiate the cost of something-let's say a necklace-take a look to see if any letters are written on the box. These letters usually correspond to a certain price which is the lowest price the seller can go. You have to ask the seller, but what isogram they use for their code.
