But when Aubrey meets handsome community coordinator and chocolate shop owner Sawyer, to show her around town, Aubrey soon begins to fall for him and realizes the magic of Solvang's Christmas spirit shines all year round. This movie is totally worth it. A friend of mine said recently that it was like a deer made a movie about human interaction, unable to understand what it is to be a human being. It's hilarious. It's also funny how many people actually see this as a real movie, and take the acting, story and dialogue seriously. It's a sad testament to the state of intelligence of some, but that doesn't detract from the movies' terrible redemption. There was no way this was made as a 'black comedy' on purpose. The incompetence present in all aspects of the film could only come about through an attempt to put Tommy's own high school angst experiences (probably) on tape. When the reviews destroyed the movie, he pulled a Paul Ruebens I wanted to do that. The denial of the films clearly serious beginnings add even more hilarity. Tommy, we're laughing at you, not with you. Thank you for that. Okay, that may be a stretch, but I have inside information in the facts. I was lucky enough to work on the movie. As I read the reviews here, especially the last one, which I'm sure was written by our great director/actor/producer/writer, I felt I had to respond. Having the dubious honor of saying that I was working on this film, has also brought with it the responsibility of telling the truth about what happened on set. Apparently Tommy had a lot of money sitting there and decided he needed to make a movie. Unable to decide what to shoot, film or video, we both shot. Side by side. Both cameras on the same head, is operated by a camera operator. We shot almost the whole thing in the parking lot and back storage shed (read-sound stage) of a camera rental house in Hollywood. I got the call to work on the show after they had already tried to start with another crew who ended up all being fired. I think we ended up crew 2 of 4. The show never had much organization to it from the beginning. We were told it would be a 3 week shoot. At the end of 3 weeks we were done exactly 1/2 way. Crew calls were mostly 8 a.m. Tommy was supposed to show up around 10:30 or 11. Since he took home the HD video camera every night, we had no choice but to waiting. Since we were only in one room or outside the door in the parking lot, we had nothing to do but sit and wait every day. When Tommy arrived we would have to see if he was in actor mode or director mode. If he. He. Actor mode, you were not allowed to talk to him so he could stay in character. Since he was in almost every scene, he was always in his actor mode. This also meant he couldn't direct. Noting the huge delays every day and the fact that we were never getting anything done, our wonderful script supervisor stepped up and became the director... At least he tried. One day he had to go off and do another show and asked if anyone else wanted to step up and direct and keep some script notes. When no one signed up, I quit. I loved it. It was my directorie who bumped into Tommy Lisa when they took the bad guy off the roof! I will also take credit for the now famous rule You tear me apart, Lisa! In the first 10 takes, Tommy kept saying, You're taking me apart! When the crew tried to hold it together, I felt I had to rectify the situation and correct the line. The crew was also instrumental in keeping the chicken line in. CHEEEEEPPPPPPP, CHEEP, CHEEP, CHEEP, CHEEP! We begged our scripty/director to do him take it. Although the crew eventually followed the original DP out the door and quit, we are all proud to have participated in the making of this film. Among the film crew rich, we're little celebrities. Dude, you were working on that thing? is a phrase that is often heard when Called The Room. I have the pleasure of driving through Hollywood every day and still seeing the billboard for the movie up and Tommy shine on me as if to say: I told you I could make film. For those looking for a photo op, it's on Highland, a few blocks south of Sunset. I know Tommy took an ad in the trade journals asking For Your Consideration, I just wish I could see him on stage accepting an Academy Award. It would have been well deserved. Rumor has it that he made a vampire movie in the works... let's hope ... I just hope I get a chance to work on it. I can only hope that The Room becomes a cult classic with midnight screenings. I'm going to put on my tuxedo and bring a football. Maybe after that, I'll stand up for a Q&A and tell the stories I've so lovingly tried to burn from my memory. My other dream is for the DVD. There are 100's of hours of behind-the-scenes footage out there. The camera for the behind-the-scenes material was always recording. All the time! It will be great to see what happened on our set. I hope he brings it out. I know I would buy several copies for all my friends and family. Do you have any questions? Forget all the three-line raves this movie has received (all of which seem to be suspicious in tone). THE ROOM is one of those rare laugh riots that is as fantastically inept as it is to border on genius. While most bad movies offer a handful of terrible scenes shared by pieces of simply boring, writer-director-producer-star Tommy Wiseau's film offers a moment of disaster after after Whether it's the made-up-by-fifth-graders dialogue, the deer-in-headlight performance, or the positively icky sex scenes (love those smushed rose petals on the chubby girl's back), you'll be crying from start to finish. This movie has already amassed a cult of people who know what to shout on screen and when; for a movie that itself is distributed, this rates as some kind of crap-movie wonder. Keep an eye out for the pointless insert shots of San Francisco, which give the idea of passing time even when it doesn't: a party scene, for example, features eight of these cut-aways. You really don't believe how awful the room is, but at least it's entertaining, albeit in a way that the lazy-eyed, strangely-bodied, English-mangling author never imagined. Don't miss it.
