Here comes santa claus sing along songs

NEW YORK (AP) - Santa claus is coming to the mall - just don't try to sit on his lap. Despite the pandemic - and the fact that Santa's age and weight put him at high risk of severe coronavirus disease - the mall owners plan to bring him back this year. But they're doing everything they can to keep a happy old man safe, including banning children from sitting on their knees, whether they were naughty or friendly. Instead, the children will tell Santa what they want for Christmas from 18 metres away, and sometimes from behind the plexiglass. Santa and his visitors may have to wear a face mask, even while they're sucking for photos. Some shopping malls will give fake gift boxes and other decorations outside Saint Nick to block children from charging against it. Other security measures include online reservations to cut on routes, workers who delete holiday-decorated sets, and hand sanitize aplenty. Santa's clocks are also cut off to relieve him of the crowds. Macy's canceled visits this year because it can't provide a safe environment for the more than 250,000 people who showed up to see Kriss Kringle at his New York flagship store. But shopping malls, which have struggled to attract shoppers for years, are unprepared to lift the holiday tradition, which is one of their biggest ways to lure people during the all-important holiday shopping season. You have to give them a reason to come or stay home and shop online, says Michael Brown, who oversees the retail team at consulting firm Kearney. More than 10 million U.S. households visited Santa claus at a mall or store last year, says GlobalData Retail managing director Neil Saunders. Almost 73% also spent the money in nearby restaurants or shops, he says. Santa Claus is a magnet that attracts people to shopping malls and without this attraction, shopping malls will struggle more to generate foot traffic, says Saunders. The operator of the CBL shopping centre, which filed for bankruptcy earlier this month, plans to bring Santa to nearly 60 malls at the end of November, about three weeks later than last year. The company decided against the plexiglass barrier because the photos didn't look right. But Santa will be socially distant and wearing a face mask. He can also put on a plastic shield to protect his face. We're doing everything we can to stay healthy, says Mary Lynn Morse, CBL's vice president of marketing. In April, the owner of the Brookfield shopping centre began planning live visits to 130 of its shopping centres and opted for sleighs and gift boxes where visitors could sit away from Santa. At one of its malls, the SoNo Collection in Norwalk, Connecticut, a round piece of plexiglass will be found in front of Santa, making it look like it's in a snowstorm. But precautions may not be enough to convince some shoppers. I think it's a bad idea, just being in the mall, downtown, Emma Wallace, from Alexandria, Virginia, who decided not to take her toddler on her first visit to Santa's this year. We're so sad, he says. We were really looking forward to this picture, which seems like every parent has them, where they're kind of scared or just a little fun with the whole Santa thing. Shopping malls are aware that many people can stay at home. The Cherry Hill program, which will bring Santa to more than 700 shopping malls, also offers Zoom calls for the first time in its 60-year history. Brookfield matched the virtual Santa JingleRing and gave people a way to chat with Santa from home. Ed Taylor, a Santa claus who usually spends months in Los Angeles making TV spots and performing in shopping malls, will stay at home in southern Oregon this year. When you think of the high-risk covid profile, you kind of draw a picture of Santa, says Taylor. He will make video calls with the families and has had online classes to get other Santa's camera ready. Meeting children practically means more to be told, as calls usually take seven minutes - about twice as much as visits to a shopping centre, where the main goal is to take a good picture. If you go online, it gives Santa the chance to experiment with his footwear. Some may throw away a formal red dress for jackets and rolled-up sleeves, as Santa is likely to call from the North Pole and run a workshop for sinking, full of occupied elves. We work at home, says Taylor. We have to make presents. We have to feed the reindeer. Some parts of Santa's appearance can't change. JingleRing, who has signed up more than 400 Santas, has held online training on how to use home bleaching kits to transform grey hair and beards into Santa's snow-white print. They were also advised to buy a white tooth. Santa can't have smoking teeth, says Walt Geer, who co-founded JingleRing this year after realising that people might need a new way to meet Santa Claus. Stephanie Soares is sticking to the old ways. She brought her daughter Gio to the Bass Pro Shops store in Bridgeport, Connecticut, last week to take a picture of Santa, who was wearing a clear plastic shield for his face and sitting behind an acrylic barrier with no glare, which sometimes made it difficult for them to hear what the kids were saying. The worker sprayed the barrier after each visit. Although we are in a pandemic pandemic, it is important that children are still able to be children and still follow regular traditions, says Soares. Investors who have owned shares since 2016 have generally seen some big gains. Indeed, the SPDR S&P 500 (NYSE: SPY) total yield over the past five years is 120.4%. There is no doubt, however, that some big shares are on the move better than others. Bank of America's Big Run: One of the market leaders for the past five years has been Bank of America Corp. (NYSE: BAC). The big banks were crushed during the worst financial crisis of 2008 and 2009. Among the banks that survived the crisis, Bank of America was one of the hardest hit. In fact, Bank of America shares fell by $2.53 in early 2009 as investors wondered whether the company could avoid bankruptcy or full nationalisation. By early 2016, Bank of America shares were up to about $16.45. Within months, the stock had hit its low point over the past five years, dropping to $10.99 after a burst of volatility in early 2016 related to concerns about an economic slowdown in China. Bank of America then went on to tear up for the rest of 2016, more than doubling off its low to around $23 by the end of the year. The stock had earned $33.05 by early 2018, before stalled for about a year and a half. What you can do from the standard renegadation of market responsibility, past performance cannot guarantee future returns. Should we avoid any stock that has shown tremendous growth in recent months? Or should we ignore this and focus on rapidly tide equity? A smart investor goes down a smart middle way, treats stocks as individuals and assesses them on a case-by-case basis. Past performance is not a guarantee, but it can be an indicator, especially consistent, long-term performance. But that's just one part of the picture of a growing stock. Investors should also look for Wall Street's position - are analysts keen on stocks? And besides, what does the inverted potential look like? Now we have a useful profile for monster growth stocks: gangbusters gains. Buy estimates from the Wall Street analyst corps, and well up for the coming year. The three stocks in the TipRanks database mark all those signs of strong growth ahead. Here are the details. OptimismRx Corporation (OPRX) The current health crisis has had a profound impact on our digital world, accelerating the move to put records and information online. OptimizeRx operates a digital platform that enables communication between different branches of the healthcare environment - doctors, pharmacies, patients - at the place of care. The value of this service is clear from the big gains in shares in recent months: in the past 52 weeks, OPRX shares have risen 277%. It's not just the share of profits that are high. Of the 3Q19, the company reported top-notch revenue in each quarter. The latest, 3Q20, has a profit of $10.52 million, which is a record for the company. Annual profit was 110 %; in the first nine months of 2020, the company's revenue was $26.9 million - another record and 56% more than in the same period in 2019. In other metrics, OptimizeRx reported that it had $12 million in cash on hand at the end of Q3, and reported that it completed two additional business deals in the quarter, bringing in the value of annual recurring revenues at $21 million. Roth Capital analyst Rick Baldry is excited about the rapid growth of OptimizeRx and doesn't get down to it. Given its RFP pipeline doubled to YY in 3Q20, we believe OPRX can accelerate organic growth to 100% in 2020. [We note] that the growth of the RFP pipeline in the oprx may not fully reflect its growth potential in 2021, given the recent announcement of the expansion of the machine learning platform (and the related data partnership with Komodo Health, which monitors 320M patients annually) hidden from the outlook while research and patents are being pursued, Baldry said. Overall, the 5-star analyst summed it up: Given that we expect both materials to side with current forecasts, OPRX is our Top Pick for 2021. In line with these bullish comments, Baldry rates OPRX a Buy, and its $70 price target means upside potential of 77% for the next 12 months. (Click here to see Baldry's track record) Wall Street appears to agree with Baldry, pointing to a unanimous strong buy consensus estimate based on 3 recent analysts' reviews. The shares are up $39.54, and their average price target of $53.33 points to a margin of 35 percent growth this year. (See OPRX stock analysis on typeRanks) Lovesac Company (LOVE) Next up is a furniture company known for its modular seating systems and beanbag seats. Lovesac offers customers an easy flexible seating area that can fit any room, home or style - and easily adaptively changing owners' moods. The company has been named one of the fast-growing furniture products over the past decade, and reported $165.9 million in total revenue for fiscal 2019. Lovesaca's growing revenue was clear in 3Q20, when the company reported net sales growth of 43.5% year-on-year, to $74.7 million. Net income switched from a $6.7 million loss in the pre-year quarter to $2.5 million in q3 profit. Gross margins improved by 10% to 55.3%. This strong sales and financial performance have valued the share 283% over the past 52 weeks. Analyst Camilo Lyon, who covers the love of BTIG, says: LOVE promotes the current COVID-19 crisis and work from the domestic environment as consumers shift their purchases to domestic goods. The company has successfully redirected its resources to support online sales, even reallocating its full-time colleagues to interact with customers online through instant messaging and product presentation on social media. Lyon believes the company's moves are successfully positioning it to thrive in the post-COVID world, modelling 27% annual revenue growth for the next two years as brand awareness grows, new customers come to the brand, and new product introductions give existing customers more reasons purchase of a brand. To that end Lyon puts the Buy rating on LOVE, while its $62 price target means room for 26% growth upwards in 2021. (Watch Lyon Lyons record, click here) In general, there are 4 recent reviews on LOVE and all are Purchases that unanimously Strong Buy consensus analyst rating. Love's share price has pushed the share price close to the average $56.75 target, which left room for 16% on the side of the $48.88 current trading price. (See LOVE STOCK ANALYSIS on tipRanks) Kirkland's (KIRK) Current crisis with Corona has done more than just push workers with white collars into remote positions and telecommunications situations. By forcing large numbers of people to stay at home, the pandemic - and the government response - has made potential furniture for home customers long looking at their lounges. Lovesac, above, is not the only company that has benefited; Kirkland's, a diverse home decor and equipment retailer with more than 380 stores in 35 countries plus a vibrant online presence, is another. Kirkland, like the other shares on this list, has shown strong earnings and shares growth over the past year. The company's latest quarterly results, for 3Q20, revealed top revenue of $146.6 million, just above analyst forecasts and slightly above-year growth. Earnings showed stronger gains. Q3 EPS was 66 cents per share, which is much better than the 53-cent loss recorded in 3Q19. If I can at least say that the valuation of the share is parallel to these gains. KIRK has increased by 1500% in the past 12 months, a huge profit reflecting the company's success in adapting to the increased importance of online sales. The strong growth has attracted the announcement of Craig-Hallum analyst Jeremy Hamblin. [Kirkland's] continues to shoot at all cylinders... While the company benefits from some industrial tailwinds, it is clear that strategic initiatives to improve margins have sustainability, while investments in an improved e-commerce platform (more than 50% in Q3) should help replace warehouse closures... We... Note that KIRK generally has a stronger balance sheet with a better FCF return (mid-teens) than its peer group, Hamblin wrote. Accordingly, Hamblin's price of KIRK shares buys and sets a $32 price target, meaning a one-year head 65% of the share price is $19.38. (Click here to see Hamblin's track record) Some supplies fly under the radar and KIRK is one of those. Hamblin's is the only recent analyst review of this company, and is resolutely positive. Typically done at the very end or at the very beginning of the year, street analysts are publishing stock estimates that they believe will show the best performance in the coming months - their top picks. Analysts have carefully analyzed each share, looking at its past and current performance, its trends in different time frames, management plans - taking into account everything. Their recommendations provide valuable guidance for building a resilient portfolio in the new year. With that in mind, we used the TipRanks database to identify the three stocks that analysts describe as top picks for 2021. Talos Energy (TALO) The Gulf of Mexico has long been known as one of the world's hydrocarbon producing regions; Talos Energy, which produces about 48,000 barrels of oil equivalent per day from offshore operations in the Gulf, is an important player in this Talos ended the third quarter of 2020 with a net loss, loss, The $135 million increased by 53% in a row. The company reported more than $353 million in affordable liquidity for the end of the quarter, of which $32 million in cash is available and $321 million in available loans. In December of the previous year and continued to this January, Talos raised its liquidity situation with issues of higher collateralised notes. The December figure, worth $500 million at 12%, will be used primarily to pay out a pre-payment issue due next year. The January issue, an additional $100 million, will be used to cover unpaid debt on a reserve-based loan fund. Both issues of the note are due in 2026. Highlighting TALO as its top E&P pick for 2021, Northland analyst Subash Chandra wrote: TALO is one of the few companies that is aware of trading in the successor values of PDP for no good reason, in our view. The company has considered a maturity wall and stresses the credit instrument with a December equity offer and refi. They enter 2021 with a breathing room to cross the finish line with Zamo and find opportunities for scaling in GoM. To that end, Chandra melts TALO Outperform (i.e. Buy), and sets a $19 price target, indicating the potential for 91% growth in the coming months. (Click here to see Chandrino's track) Overall, with five reviews by analysts on the file, including 4 Buys and one Hold, Talos gets a Strong Buy rating from consensus analyst. The stock is priced at $9.96, with their average target of $14.33 giving a 44% head-to-one horizon. (See TALO stock analysis on tipRanks) Twilio (TWLO) Next is Twilio, a Silicon Valley cloud communications company. Twill's software services allow customers to start their telecommunications service through their office computer servers, allowing not only phone calls, but also chats, texts and video conversations. The service includes security features, such as user verification. The COVID pandemic and the transition to remote work carried out on the economy was a goodness for Twilia. The move put a premium on stable and reliable remote connections and telecommunications, and the company's revenue, which was already strong and showed consecutive profits in each quarter, rose to $447 million in 3Q20. Then Twilia shares have bounced 225% in the past 52 weeks. Oppenheimer analyst Itai Kidron sees the company on solid ground for further growth, writing, while some placed and accepted are on the 1Q21 site, Twilio's long-term opportunity remains undervalued by investors. We believe that differentiating the company's product portfolio (communications/data) and the evolving GTM approach (rental/GSI) can lead to C2K/int'l adoption/expansion and enable &gt;30% rev. growth on the scale e/23/24. The five-star analyst selects TWLO as the top pick based on his upbeat analysis of Twilio. This includes the Outperform rating (i.e. Buy) and The $550 price target, which means one-year growth of 41%. (Click here to see Kidron's track record) How does Kidron's bet weigh against Street? Overall, Wall Street likes Twilia, which is clear from 21 analysts' reviews. No fewer than 18 of these is Buys, against only 3 Holds. Recent gains in the stock's shares, however, pushed the price to $388.65, leaving room for just 2% per head before hitting an average price target of $396.88. (See TWLO stock analysis on tipRanks) SI-Bone (SIBN) Medical tech is an area of almost infinite possibilities, and SI-Bone has found a nish. The company specializes in diagnosing sand treatment of pain and dysfunction in the sacroiliary joint between the lower back and the upper part of the frontal. The company's revenue fell between 4Q19 and 2Q20 as the Corona crisis dragged out selective medical procedures. This turned into Q3 when the economy began to open; many industries, including the health sector, have seen a break-up of demand for pent-up that has not yet broken up. In crude, SIBN reported a 42 per cent consecutive increase in revenue for Q3, with a top line of $20.3 million. Over the year, revenue shrand by 26%. In this quarter, the company performed 50,000 iFuse procedures performed by 2,200 surgeons worldwide. The company had $132 million in liquidity at the end of the quarter, against $39.4 million in long-term debt. Looking forward to the company leading up to 8% to 10% yoy profit in full-year revenue for 2020, expect it to top the line at $73 million to $74 million. Analyst David Saxon, who covers stocks for Needham, says SIBN has shown resilience during the pandemic, and we believe its growth drivers can help it beat consensus revenue throughout 2021. In addition, we expect the expansion of SIBN's sales forces for 2021, strengthening momentum in the training of surgeons, the upcoming launch of products and marketing directly to patients will all contribute to strong revenues over the next few years. Saxon uses this point to support his top pick status for SIBN. Its average price target is $35, points to a 23% head, and fits neatly with its Buy rating. (Click here to see Saxonino's song) All in all, SI-Bone gets a strong buy from Wall Street, and is unanimous – based on 5 positive opinions. The shares are up $28.48, and their average target of $33.80 represents room for ~19% growth in the run-up to 2021.
