That's a bad combination for the company, which late on Wednesday posted disappointing first-quarter earnings. The stock fell 2.7% in after-hours trading. The company's profit and revenue came below Wall Street expectations. The amount of buffalo wild wings' money home from every dollar of restaurant sales is falling rapidly, as the company must pay more for wings and uses promotions such as Half-Price Wing Tuesdays to bring in new customers. But the biggest competition in the restaurant chain will be relatively boring: a bunch of people in suits will vote on Friday, which should remain as members of buffalo wild wings' board and who should go. Wild Wings' Buffalo management is locked in a fight with a hedge fund that owns shares of the company and wants to change its strategy. Marcato Capital Management has called on the company to switch its CEO and sell more of its sites to franchisees, a strategy that it considers to be paid to shareholders. Recently, restaurant chain sales have been weak and cannot be in line with rising chicken petal prices. Marcato nominated four nominees to the company's board of directors. The company has proposed its list of directors and tells shareholders it is already changing positively, while Marcat's strategy of franhing almost all restaurants is at risk. On Friday, the company will have an annual meeting and shareholder votes. Buffalo Wild Wings' future hangs in the balance. These types of proxy contests are relatively common on Wall Street. Analysts, however, are particularly uncertain about what will happen in this case, as it is unclear how the largest shareholders plan to vote, and advisory firms telling investors how to vote have been divided in their recommendations. Shareholders and customers can expect some changes in Buffalo Wild Wings no matter who wins. Marcat's victory could be an immediate blow to the Buffalo Wild Wing share price. As one influential advisory firm stood by Marcato, the stock rose 8%, suggesting Wall Street was preferable to March's victory. More restaurants could be sold to franchisees who manage their own restaurants and buffalo wild wings would pay a portion of their revenue. While buffalo wild wings would still have something the customer experience partly imposes the managerial skills of the franchisee. Marcato complained about the quality of Buffalo Wild Wings, its use of technology and its perception of price/value. Marcato's victory could mean that Buffalo Wild Wings restaurants get more tablets where customers can, for example. Would prices go up or down? That's still unclear. If the restaurant's chosen directors win, Buffalo Wild Wings' stock could fall in the short term. In the long term, the performance of the shares will depend on how quickly Buffalo Wild Wings can reduce costs and bolster sales. Buffalo Wild Wings will likely continue rolling out the home delivery service (already showing some success) and talk to consultants about other changes that could spur sales. In the long run, some analysts are skeptical that the outcome will do much to change the company's path. The outcome of the upcoming proxy vote is seen as irrelevant given our view that neither alternative offers a solution to the ongoing deterioration of the company's underlying condition, wrote Wedbusha analyst Nick Setyan. Big Picture: Buffalo Wild Wings will hold its annual meeting on Friday. Shareholders will vote on whether to elect a new list of directors proposed by the hedge fund. The TV shows at the Buffalo Wild Wings this week will be sparking the thunderous nailing of LeBron James and the ugly slapping of Sidney Crosby. An error occurred, please try again later. Shares in the hospitality chain jumped eight per cent on Wednesday after an investment advisory firm recommended that investors support the hedge fund's attempt to shut down the company's board of directors. Institutional shareholder services advising investors on voting for members and corporate board policies have been supported by a new group of directors proposed by hedge fund Marcato Capital Management (which ISS calls a dissident). If these directors win the June 2 election, they are likely to put pressure on the company to change its strategy and possibly fire the current CEO. Large money management companies, which hold many shares, consult iss before deciding how to vote. Marcato alleged that Buffalo Wild Wings had lost ground in recent years due to mis-run; sales at existing restaurants have fallen in four of the last five quarters. ISS agreed to a few hedge fund items, noting that in the last two years, the company appears to have lost its way. For example, the chain apparently used new store openings and promotions to make sales strong, even though activities in restaurants depending on the iss. To make things right, Marcato wants to bring in an outside consultant and sell restaurants to franchisees – currently about half of those owned by franchisees, but Marcato believes the franchise should be at least 90%. It also wants Buffalo Wild Wings to accelerate its international expansion. Buffalo Wild Wings responded to the ISS recommendation by saying that the company had already made promising changes, cost-cutting and restaurant modernisation. The company also raised concerns - somewhat captured by ISS - that the aggressive franchising strategy could be risky. Wall Street will be closely watching on June 2 whether shareholders agree. Photo via TwitterSports bar chain Buffalo Wild Wings says it is exploring the possibility of offering legal sports betting in its restaurants. A patron could order a beer, a plate of nachos and put $10 on the Patriots to cover the spread. A company spokesman told ESPN that may's Supreme Court ruling, which allows states to legalize betting on sporting events, presented new opportunities for restaurants where patrons often go to watch matches on TV. As the largest sports bar in America, we believe buffalo wild wings is a unique positioning to enhance the restaurant experience for our guests, the company said for ESPN. We are actively exploring opportunities, including potential partners, as we assess the next steps for our brand. The Supreme Court ruled that the Supreme Court's 6-3 amendment to the 1992 Amendment to the Supreme Court abolished a federal law called the Professional and Amateur Sports Protection Act (PASPA). This law has blocked states from sponsoring, operating, advertising, promoting, licensing or approving sports gambling. The court ruled that Congress can regulate sports gambling activity if it chooses, but if it does not, then each state can act alone. New Jersey has brought the case because the state wants to legalize sports games to help revive the Atlantic City. It's unclear how many other states will ultimately decide to legalize gambling, meaning Buffalo Wild Wings could only offer casinos at its restaurants in states that allow it. According to ESPN, the logical way to address this issue would be to match the restaurant chain with the national gaming operator. An enthusiastic reaction Buffalo Wild Wings says it will consider the possibility and will no longer until she reaches a conclusion, but ESPN ESPN were ecstatic at the idea. More power for them, jump on the train, host Mike Golic said as he brought the news. Either you jump on a train, or you watch a train pass by, or you're standing in front of a train. Gambling could also help boost sales at Buffalo Wild Wings, whose business has been down in recent years as younger consumers have been less enthusiastic about the sports bar scene. The restaurant chain was acquired in February by Roark Capital, the parent company of Arby's company. According to gaming industry sources, as many as 32 states are considering laws to legalise and regulate sports betting within its borders. We go to Buffalo Wild Wings (A.K.A.B-Dubs) to catch a game, and dont you want to be disparaging your diet? Don't be 12! There are low-calorie options on their menu -- just go to the right strategy. And we're here to train you. Let's talk sauce first, because almost everything in the BWW comes with a conditioning. These small side sauces range from 40 calories to 320, so you have to shop smart. Stick to sweet BBQ, mild, medium, spicy garlic, hot, hot BBQ or wild sauce. Dodge the Blue Cheese, Ranch and Southwestern Ranch.As for food, no shame in calls for naked chickens. Order four and add the dry sauce, which we suggested for just 225 calories. On the site you can still have Veggie Boat carrots, celera, and light ranch dressing for 110 calories, or split plain fries or Buffalo Chips with a friend for about 140. But heads up! The side salad has more saturated fat than french fries. If you get one, order cheese, bacon and krouton on the side and use a light dressing. Baked garlic mushrooms work best for the team. If you share four, it's less than 100 calories per person. And again - watch the sauce! You can get another 320 calories on your plate. Ask for a low-fat dressing or eat them. As for grilled chicken biflettos: this delicam reaches less than 400 calories. Keep holding the sour cream and add more lettuce to cut the fat content and up your vegetation score. And share your Chips ∓ Salsa order with your friends. Just 125 calories for a quarter of the order. And on these wings: If you can't deny the B-Dubs signature dish, set your limit to 5 wings and stick to the dry side of the sauce option. RELATED LINKS:Try this super-secret Superfood!
