What cryptoid are you? Click to take the test. The Fresno nightcrawler, also known as the Fresno alien, is a cryptoid who has made two appearances so far, one in Fresno, California and one in Yosemite National Park, also in California. In both sightings, it is only seen in videos. However, a man in Poland also claimed to have seen the creature. It is said to resemble the Creature of the Carmel Area. Sightings The main article of the Carmel Area. Carmel Area Creature The witness, a 60-year-old former Marine still unnamed and his wife were driving near Carmel on December 12, 2014, when they climbed a hill and saw a slender 7's tall gray creature that is now known as the Creature of the Carmel Area. The anonymous witness said this: We recently bought a place in the Fort Hill area (in southeastern Highland County). We noticed for the first time after 30 days living here that suddenly we have a perfect circle that remains cool green, no matter the weather, in our front garden. On Friday night (the 12th), we were coming home. After turning on Carmel Road, which leads to our road, we went around the bend by the carmel church and then up a small slope and approximately 3 meters over the slope and in front of our truck, the 'alien' ran down the road and into the forest. There have been many possible sightings of the Nightcrawler in the shape of the creature from the Carmel area, a thin, armless, pale white humanoid creature seen in Ohio Nightcrawlers The creature was also seen in Yosemite where images were again taken of what appears to be another security camera. This time there are two creatures, one very small (less than 0.5 meters), and the feet of the creatures can be clearly seen. Just like what appears to be some kind of connected dowem from the knees to the upper body, at least. The cryptid was also filmed in Poland, this time from what appears to be a handheld camera judging by the fmotion of the footage. The creature may not be seen for long, but it appears to have traits similar to the largest recorded in Yosemite. Explanations An alien or alien being. A new species. Possibly a primate with short arms. A badly identified deer standing. Pants and/or a puppet on a wire A bird walking like a crane. A person wearing large pants and walking on stilts Description Fresno nightcrawlers appear to be relatively short creatures (approximately 1.5 meters) with most of their height being made up of their legs as they possess an extremely small body. It is difficult to find details on the upper body of the cryptist due to the poor quality of his filming. It's an extremely thin white humanoid with no perceptible arms. A larger specimen appears to have connected knee to torso. Cryptids seem to have very short, thin, stilt-like feet. It's hard to judge the exact cryptids in the footage due to poor quality. The Creature of the Carmel Area is tall and gray, without presumably no arms and long, muscular legs. It is bipedal and walks in a strange way with its knees back bending. You look like Fresno Nightcrawler. OriginS Although there have been allegations that they are part of Native American folklore in the region, this has been unmasked. The first sighting of a Fresno nightcrawler took place in Fresno, California by a man named Joseph. Joseph had a surveillance camera watching his front lawn and looked at the camera when he heard a dog barking. Media The Fresno Nightcrawler is best known for being one of two video cases featured in the second episode of Syfy's Fact or Faked: Paranormal Files. The team found the Nightcrawler unexplained. It is also now considered a fun urban legend and a captivating addition to pop culture Hoaxes Some of the sightings are actually a pair of white pants being puppets, therefore a hoax. The Alley GIF of the Fresno Nightcrawler was created by Youtuber Captain Disillusion walking down an alley with a melon and then using digital manipulation to remove the upper half of his body, his purpose of demonstrating how easily videos of cryptoids can be faked. He said the citizen brought the footage to Univision, hoping to find answers, but was left undated. From there, the video reached the paranormal investigators, eventually ending up in the hands of the docuseries SyFy Fact or Faked: Paranormal Files, which brought the possibility of independent pedestrian pants to the masses and deemed them unconfirmed. Since then, Fresno Nightcrawler's original film has gone viral, racking up over a million views on YouTube. More videos, usually of the determinedly counterfeit variety, have emerged over the years, and sightings of the creatures have been reported in as far away and exotic locations as Poland and a little further west in California. The possible current explanations sightings, as listed by his Cryptid Wiki, include an extraterrestrial being, a primate with short short a misidentified gazelle standing, and, most importantly, trousers. Fresno, California, may not always be the most exciting place in the world, but it has a claim to fame that is out of this world. The fresno nightcrawler sightings began in the 1990s and have only occurred a few times since then. These strange beings are cryptoids that look like pants, but are only a few feet tall and are seen just wandering around. There are only a few eyewitnesses in Fresno, but nightcrawlers appear on other surveillance cameras, surprising those who check the security tapes. Many video images of cryptoids are easily unmasked by video analysis, but the strange thing about nightcrawlers is that the videos seem to be legit. According to experts at Sci-Fi Channel's Fact or Faked, pretending these mysterious creatures would prove to be a difficult task. So, what exactly is on these tapes? No one is sure, but theorists propose that strange creatures can be ghosts, aliens, a pair of possessed pants, or one of the strangest farces ever invented. No one can be sure. However, the known facts about fresno nightcrawlers are enough to leave viewers scratching their heads. Photo: Video: YouTubeNightcrawlers began appearing in the spotlight in 2007. An owner in Fresno, California, decided to mount a security camera above the family garage. The man - known only as Joseph - wanted to know why his dogs lated at night - in case there was an intruder or a strange animal lurking. What he saw the next day was enough to shock him to call the police. The footage showed a pair of strange and small creatures, only a few feet tall. They walked almost surreally across the screen, and family members realized that it was these things that had made their dogs wash so much. Neither the family nor the police were able to find out what these creatures were. Soon, the media took over the footage, and the Fresno Nightcrawlers became a phenomenon. The family decided to remain anonymous, partly to avoid the supernatural spotlight, but also partly out of fear. One of the prevailing theories about these creatures is that they are aliens. They can move like people sometimes, but analysts think they are too small and move too awkwardly to be human. Based on their appearance, they also do not resemble any known terrestrial creature. Redditors question why they are here, as they don't seem to be stealing anything, doing any damage to anyone, or kidnapping any person or animal. Theorists wonder if they are alien creatures here to study human life, even if they have never been seen accompanied by UFOs. Photo: ParaBreakdown / via YouTube Fair UseOne of the most interesting answers to many questions the Nightcrawler really has to do with the local Native American legend. According to tribe members living near Fresno, Fresno, Nightcrawlers are beings who practically always lived on Earth, even before humans got there. According to these myths, Nightcrawlers have long legs that allow them to move through difficult or swampy landscapes because they are beings from the swamp world. Legend has it that beings are part of our world now in order to rebuild a connection between humans and our natural environment as a kind of bearer of peace. While they don't seem to have made any noticeable efforts to do this so far, the fact that stories about them have existed for generations indicates that they may be nothing new to Fresno. Video: YouTubeIn March 2011, Yosemite National Park officials were putting up cameras in an attempt to capture invaders who were damaging the property. Instead, what they picked up was some pretty unusual images. Security cameras again captured images of pale, small, armless creatures, just walking down one of the park's paths. Once again, once the media got the footage, the Fresno Nightcrawlers were on everyone's lips once again. The creatures appeared to be the same ones that had appeared in the Fresno film, and seemed to walk and behave in the same way. There were a handful of alleged sightings, but neither Yosemite nor Fresno made them appear in more security footage.
