Many hear the language of their daily lives. After all, Spanish is heard in popular music, movies and TV shows. Other people want to learn Spanish based on their plans to work, vacation, or volunteer in any of the 20 countries where Spanish is the official language. Whatever your reason, you can get off to a good start by first learning how to pronounce some very basic words and phrases. It is an important step to understand and be understood by any of the 437 million people around the world who speak Spanish. Too often, new Spanish students focus on remembering long lists of Spanish vocabulary words and phrases. Then they get frustrated because they have little-to-no ability to participate in everyday Spanish conversation. This is why it is recommended that new Spanish language learners work to understand and pronounce basic words and phrases. This smart and proven approach to learning Spanish will help you learn to confidently and comfortably speak Spanish. You should know that Spanish has some pronunciation distinctions that can make it a challenge for language-appropriate. As an example, the letter r is pronounced r differently and takes some practice for most new students. This particular sound is formed by pressing the tip of the tongue on the roof of the mouth, about a third of the way back into the mouth. Some Spanish language experts suggest that new students practice making the t sound, as the English word butter says. Refining your pronunciation skills requires immediate feedback on your efforts. Rosetta Stone helps you sound great with our TruAccent™ a speech recognition engine. Our patented technology compares your voice to native and non-natives in real time – giving you instant feedback to get the most accurate pronunciation. It's also adjustable, allowing you to adjust your accent as needed. is a powerful tool to help you learn and speak the Spanish language.
