A sound of thunder by ray bradbury questions and answers

Summary of Bradbury's Sound of Thunder, a hunter named Eckels pays $10,000 to travel with Time Safari, a time machine company that takes hunters back to the time of dinosaurs and allows them to hunt tyrannosaurus Rex. The company does not provide anything - neither your safety nor your return, and there are strong instructions and expectations about how hunters should behave when they travel back in time. Eckels and two other hunters, Billings and Kramer, have obeyed their guide, Travis, all the time. Before leaving, Eckel reviews this information with the man behind the table, and they both engage in small conversations. Everyone is happy because President Keith has just been elected, and many believed that travelling over time was a way to avoid the day when Deutscher, the other candidate and potential dictator, won. When they travel sixty million two thousand fifty-five years ago in time, Eckels is incredibly excited about the idea of conquering the beast Tyrannosaurus. He adds: Good God, every hunter who has ever lived would ensue us today. This makes Africa seem like Illinois (3). Before they exit the time machine, Travis points the way out by Time Safari. It flies six inches on the ground and is the only path that hunters should travel to. They don't touch anything during their stay in the past, and they only shoot when the guide and his assistant instruct them to shoot. When Eckel asks about this particular rule, he is surprised by the severity of Travis's response. Travis insists that stopping any of the natural processes of the past could have irreparable consequences for the future. He draws from the example of killing one mouse and articulates possible aftershocks from it: Step on the mouse and you leave your finger, like the Grand Canyon, across Eternity. Queen Elizabeth could never be born, Washington could not cross Delaware, there might never be a United States at all (4). Stepping on the mouse is a much broader reach than Eckels originally thought. Together, five of them retreat on the road to find their robes. Tyrannosaurus Rex has been carefully scouted by Travis on a previous trip to the past, where he waited to see when one of the dinosaurs would die naturally and then be timed for the next hunting trip accordingly. In this particular monster, the wooden limb is going to fall and kill it. Travis and Time Safari are very careful, leaving the past just as it was supposed to unfold. When they reach the clearing where Tyrannosaurus is scheduled to arrive, Eckels begins to have second thoughts, and he becomes increasingly afraid as the dinosaur begins to look at it. Eckels describes the encounter as the sound of thunder. Eckels is paralyzed by fear, and Travis screams at him, tells him to go back to the time machine and wait for others. Because the Eckels had to shoot he has now threatened the lives of the rest of the group, and Travis is furious with him. Dazed and confused, Eckels stumbles off of time safari road and into the jungle, grass giving way to his feet. Meanwhile, guns cracked furiously as others tried to take down the giant beast. Like a stone idol like a mountain avalanche, Tyrannosaurus fell (7). Caked in blood, others return to the time machine where they find Eckels shivering on the floor. He managed to find his way back to the time machine. They all hear the cracking sound – the tree branch has now fallen over the dinosaur as it was observed. Seeing Eckels, Travis announces the decision that he can't return to the future – he sees mud on his boots and knows that he went off the road. They have no idea how much damage Eckels has caused to future generations and species. Travis relents a bit though, and allows Eckels to return to the future until he removes bullets from the monster skull. Eckels returns drenched in blood and passes immediately after returning the ball to Travis. Travis is still outraged and threatens to kill the Eckels, but eventually they clean up and begin to travel back to today. When they pass the time machine, Travis impatiently checks with the man behind the table to see if everything is ok, and the man tells him it is. The man, however, works a little differently than when they went on safari, and Eckels notice a strange smell in the air. It's weak, but something is different. He looks around him trying to figure out what has changed. The immediate thing that he noticed had changed was the sign on the wall. The words were spelled differently, and Eckels begins to panic, seeing firsthand the effects of his walk off the road. He sits down and checks himself, especially the bottoms of his shoe. Embedded in the mud, glittering green and gold and black, was a butterfly, very beautiful and very dead. In panic, he asks the man behind the table who won the election the other day, and the man replies: You're kidding? You know well. Deutscher, of course! What else? (11.) The death of a butterfly has changed in the future - another man won the United States Presidency, and people believe he will be a dictator. Eckel shouts out in disbelief, begging to return to the past and somehow undo what he has done. He sits down with his eyes closed and senses Travis entering the room; Travis breathes loudly and takes safety off of his rifle. Suddenly all Eckels hears is a thunderous sound, and he's dead. Analysis of Sound of Thunder, Bradbury offers a positive and effective interpretation of the dangers of the weather path and the potential ripple effects, emphasizing our connectivity with each other. He also explores the link between past, present and future, and he vivid descriptions and grasping the narration. Bradbury's prolific ability to paint a vivid image shines in his description of Tyrannosaurus Rex, a prey that hunters have come to kill. Metaphors fill his descriptions. The dinosaur is a watchmaker's nails, pistons for feet, and thighs of steel (6). It lasted like a ballerina, but loomed as an evil god. As effective as metaphors are themselves, they are even stronger when juxtaposed by one another, as well as more realistic descriptors of dinosaurs. Even though the reader has never seen a living Tyrannosaurus Rex, Bradbury's descriptions make it seem as though the dinosaur is standing directly in front of you. The most powerful part of Bradbury's story is his articulation of connectivity between past, present and future. Travis's tirade at the beginning of the story determines the possible ripple effect that one ill-fated move may have for the future. Unfortunately, Eckels and the rest of the band realize this is really possible if they return after the trip. The death of one butterfly has dramatically changed the world they once knew. The language has evolved differently, and important presidential elections were decided differently. This is a powerful advice to consider how your actions today can affect the future. These compounds are delicate and tiny, even more stressed by the fact that the little butterfly had such a major influence on the world. Even if we are aware of the possible ripple, we cannot consider the fact that a small decision can have a big impact. This is both precautionary and empowering. Although there is a potential for failure, there is also the possibility of making a positive difference. Bradbury's story is also a gripping environmentalist story. Not only are different periods of time connected, but all living beings are also part of an interconnected world. His story helps us to see the importance of protecting the natural environment, which is an important issue in today's world.
