In many ways, they are the same figure shown at the opposite end of life. The city's residents often speak frequently about the similar looks and personalities of Will and his grandfather. Will and Rucker both love practical jokes, narrative and struggle, Rucker provides models for what will become in his old age. Rucker's integrity informs his actions, including his marriage to Miss Love Simpson. Throughout Cold Sassy Tree will struggle with the moral consequences of his actions and begin to gain confidence that shapes Rucker, both Will and Rucker question the consistency that the residents of Cold Sassy demand, even if it's just a conundrum about the rules that hit him as illogical, while Rucker has grown used to making stubborn objections and principles against those rules. To resist the trap of mourning and the logical question of refraining from happiness in order to pay tribute to the dead. He began to understand that there was no need to mourn for someone Rucker, who seems to think that just as Will did when he was a child, not only muse about the irrational rules, he performed. For example, he insisted on marrying Love Simpson and ignoring his daughter's gossip objections. In addition, instead of waiting and mourning, it is time that society considers it appropriately, he proceeds with his marriage precisely when he wants. To
