Flexible base partial denture

Today, many dentists prescribe flexible material for removable partial prostheses (RPD) because it makes a better, more powerful device in a fraction of time. Flexible material reduces seat time, eliminates invasive procedures, and cumbersome materials associated with rigid partials. With Valplast and FlexStar from DeLux Dental, there's no need for metal! What DeLux client patients love most is how their flexible partials literally disappear into their mouths. The basic material merges with the surrounding tissue, making the transitions of the basic tissue unobservable. Valplast® is a flexible thermoplastic, made of nylon, thinner and more translucent than the traditional part. Doctors appreciate minimal training, easy insertion and long-term strength. Patients love Valplast's metalless comfort and natural appearance. Valplast has excellent appearance and patient acceptance! Call DeLux for the next flexible partial prosthesis and receive a 1-month delivery of Valplast prosthesis cleaning absolutely free of charge! Features: Flexible Comfortable Biocompatible / Non-Allergenic Superior Aesthetics Relinable and Repairable Mixtures with Teeth and Gums Minimizes Irritation of Elegant Cosmetic Tissue - No Free Metal Locks - Free Monomer - Free Acrylic Benefits: Aesthetics - Allows Patients Natural Tissue Tuna Appear Comfort - Thin, easy and flexible retention – flexed in a resonant position, under the subcut resistance – clinically unbreakable, extremely durable Ease – is it not necessary to prepare hygienic teeth or tissues – will it not absorb efficient stains or odours – Less time of seat required Guaranteed – 100% Warranty against fracture in normal use What makes flexible prostheses so unique and special? Our flexible partials are made from the flexible basic resin of the Valplast or FlexStar prosthesis, ideal for partial prostheses and unilateral restorations. Resin is a biocompatible nylon thermoplastic with unique physical and aesthetic properties that provides unlimited versatility of design and eliminates concern for acrylic allergies. Working with the metal-based RPD design is complex because it involves adapting rigid materials to a flexible environment. This leaves much room for error, especially in cases where ideal clinical drawings and preparations are challenged. With our flexible prostheses, the material in these parts is perfectly suited for the variety of natural conditions in the mouth. It simplifies the design and allows the DPR itself to balance the simultaneous retention, support and stability requirements. Whatever your budget, you'll never have to compromise your dental health. Accessible Solutions Traditional partial vs. flexible prostheses For patients who have missing teeth, partial dentures were the most affordable and convenient restoration option. Usually, they are made with metal locks attached to a base of the color of the gums. However, this is not always an ideal option for every patient. What are traditional partial prostheses? Traditional partial dentures are used according to the remaining teeth to fill any gaps. This type of prosthesis consists of replacement teeth attached to a base of pink acrylic gum, held instead of metal frames. The partials are then attached using either metal locks or almost invisible precision accessories that give a more aesthetically pleasing look. Traditional partial prostheses What are flexible partial prostheses? Unlike prostheses more traditional, bulky, flexible parts are made of a high quality plastic that fits perfectly in the mouth and is virtually invisible. In addition, they DO NOT require metal locks to keep them in place. Flexible partial prostheses Why should I opt for flexible partial prostheses? Flexible partials are an alternative to both metal-based prostheses and fixed restoration options, such as Bridges. While these prostheses could come at a slightly higher cost, they offer many benefits, including: 1. Natural Flexible Partial Prostheses look are always made with color, shape and fit in mind, working to get a remarkable natural looking-result. In addition, the lack of metal locks allows the dentures to blend perfectly with the remaining gums and teeth. 2. Better comfort Since flexible parts are custom-made to suit each patient's unique anatomy, this prosthesis is one of the most comfortable tooth replacement options on the market. They are also lightweight, which allows patients to get used to prosthetics very quickly. 3. Completely flexible metal flexible partial prostheses are totally metal-free, making them an excellent alternative for patients suffering from an allergy to metal or who may feel that having metal in their mouth is not the healthiest option. 4. Minimum training Compared to other options for replacing teeth, such as dentures supported by the implant, flexible partial prostheses require minimal preparation and their plastic material will: Reduce sin time Eliminating the need for invasive procedures Shorten the design time Reduce the chances of any construction errors 5. Durable Even though flexible prostheses are made of a lightweight material, they are very strong and durable and built to withstand stress and pressure in the mouth. In addition, they are resistant to chemical damage. Losing your teeth to illness or injury does not mean you have to say goodbye to an attractive smile. Dental prostheses and dental implants are two options for replacing lost teeth or your dentist may also recommend flexible dentures. Made of softer material than regular dentures, these specialized dentures might be the best option for you. Combinations of porcelain, acrylic resin, nylon and cobalt chromium metal are used to make dentures. Porcelain used to be the preferred material to make denture teeth, but resin has taken on popularity because it is easier and cheaper, and the material sticks better to the base of the denture. Most prosthesis bases are made of acrylic resin or cobalt metal chromium. One advantage of using acrylic resin is that it can be painted to fit the patient's gums, but the metal is less likely to break if the prostheses are abandoned. A third option a flexible nylon prosthesis base Flexible prostheses help prevent many of the problems that ordinary dentures cause. Dental prostheses that have a rigid resin or a metal base may take some of the basics used to. In addition to getting used to the sensation of the prosthesis, the patient must learn to hold them in place with his cheeks and tongue. New prostheses often cause pain and irritation the first few days, and patients must learn to clean them carefully to avoid breaking. Flexible prostheses provide a solution for patients who cannot or do not want to use regular dentures. The most obvious advantage is that they are not fragile, so they are less likely to break if they are abandoned. The British Association of Clinical Dental Technology lists some more benefits: They cling to the gums and do not need adhesive prosthesis or metal locks to hold them in place. The material is clear and allows the natural color of the gum to show through. It doesn't take as long to be manufactured as regular prostheses. A review published in the Journal of Dental and Medical Sciences of iosR mentions several advantages of these specialized prostheses. Comfort is a major benefit, and patients often find chewing easier than when wearing regular dentures. Some patients are allergic to acrylic resin, nickel or other materials in traditional prostheses, and some have difficulty opening the mouth wide. For these patients, flexible variety may be the only type they can wear. Dentists may also recommend them to patients who have had missing teeth for a long time. Although soft-base dentures are not likely to break when dropped, patients should clean them carefully. The flexible base is more prone to the accumulation of bacteria than a rigid base. Remove dentures every day and brush them all over with a toothbrush and warm water to keep them fresh, and swish a mouthwash, would be Colgate Total Advanced Pro-Shield, which helps prevent gingivitis. Brush any teeth left twice a day and floss between them once a day. Flexible prostheses are one of the many options available to replace natural teeth effectively. If you think these might be the right choice for you, talk to the dentist. Dentist.
