Image: infinity21 (Shutterstock) Provides the least threat to coronavirus with the ongoing travel restrictions, it may be shortly before your next international cares. But that doesn't mean you should wait to apply for or renew your passport, because there may be a long line in front of you. As USA Today reported, the State Department cut back on passport operations from mid-March through June as part of their efforts to reduce the spread of COVID-19. According to the agency's website, suspended application processing for reinforcements during this time and only provided passports for life-or-death emergencies. As a result, the implementation of balloons is $1.8 million per worker time back in June. While passport agencies are slowly reopen, the State Department is not at full capacity -- and those who apply for non-emergency passports will still experience a delay. You can check on the operation status of your local passport agency here. You may have the option to apply in person to an acceptance facility or you may renew your passport by mail. While the State Department does not list now expect wait times on their website, some users are getting estimates via Twitter. All applicants should continue to expect process delays in several months as we work to get through a large volume of applications, the agency said in a tweet on August 10. Even if your passport hasn't expired for several months, you should start the renewal process now. It can save you from stress awaiting your passport to come across after you've already booked a trip -- and you can avoid paying extra for reinstatement services later. After applying, you can check the status of the application online or by calling the agency at (877) 487-2778. A other reason to apply now: it will give you something to look for once the pandemic ends. While it can be difficult to imagine the eye-setting of exotic destinations now, it will still be interesting to receive that new shiny passport in the mail. You can even start working on a travel rewards strategy or saving money for a future trip. With your new passport in hand, it will be easier to start traveling again once it's safe. The Chriselle Passport renewal factor is not a until you dig your paper out the night before having an international flight and realize that it's expired (uh oh). No matter if you're headed abroad on a solo trip, on a girl's vacation, or even on your honeymoon, you'll need to make sure you've got a valid passport in advance. As long as your passport has been given to you in the last 15 years and haven't been damaged, you'll have several options to choose from when it comes to renewal, all based on the crunch the time you're under for summer travel. Going on a trip would be all about having fun, and we think it should be as stress-free as possible. So we've rounded up everything you need to know about passport renewal. Sit back, relax, roll in, and learn how to renew your passport with ease. Passport renewal is not a quick process -- if you don't plan to pay the expedited fee, it can take six to eight weeks to start ending. As soon as you have a trip on the calendar, count how many weeks (or months) out you can; obviously the sooner you get started, the better. If a vacation abroad pops up at the last minute, don't worry: You can pay an additional fee to speed up the process so it only takes two to three weeks. If you need to throw wear out of the country within 14 days, there is also an option to visit a passport renewal desk in your city (but more on that later). If you're going to renew your passport by mail, you can download the necessary forms online, print them, fill them out, and mail them in. It is not possible to submit them electronically at this time. If you are paying a fee to expedite the process, a personal check or a money order in which the amount will have to be included in your application (also make sure you write Reinstatement on the outside of your envelope). It is also recommended by the U.S. Department of State to use a mail tracking service since you will send personal documents. As we mentioned above, if this is a rushed job and you're travelling internationally within 14 days, it is necessary for you to go to your nearest passport agency. You must make an appointment before calling the National Passport Information Center, but it won't cost you anything to set up a time. Get everything together that you'll need in advance: your most recent passport, a recent color photo, a copy of your wedding certificate (if your name has been changed), and your personal locker. If you're going to people, you should also bring proof of travel such as your flight details and ticket receipts. And, most importantly, once you get your new passport, keep it safe in a chic case like the one below. Wollertz/ShutterstockAttention, Hustle Series: Do you have a trip -- local or abroad -- coming in the near future? If your passport is set to expire soon (or you need to find a new one), you might want to send in these rather than later. Why? For starters, process times are shorter between September and December, according to the U.S. State Department. (Find out why they don't want you to vacation in these cities in Mexico, though.) Demand for passports usually increases once the New Year is hit and continues in the summer. To get your passport back quickly, it's best to get a head start now before rush to upset winter vacation. Aside times processing, though, has another reason to ensure that your passport is valid and up-to-date: The real identity law will enter into effect next year. This law sets certain standards for drivers' state licenses, in order for them to be considered as a valid federal ID for use in airport security controls. It goes without saying that no the right ID could lead to a massive headache at airport security. To cover all your bases, you'll want to travel with both your state license and your passport. In this way, if your license is not compliant, you can just whip out a valid passport-issue resolved. Be sure to avoid these airport error errors before your next flight, too. In order to receive a new passport, you will need to appear in person. Looking to renew? Renewals can be done by mail, but be sure to send in this form before your original passport expires. Learn more about why your valid passport might expire in some countries. If you are the owner of an American passport, you might be curious about where the sentence is left quo from. Safe travels! [Source: LA Times] A passport is an easy document to recognize travel that identifies you and authorizes you to travel. If you're from the U.S., your passport will be a small blue booklet, containing your photo, name, date of birth, residence in the United States, and many empty pages awaiting empty coupons. Your passport will usually be valid for 10 years. You will generally need to apply for a passport in order to leave and enter the U.S. from any other country. Whenever you arrive in a new country, you'll have to hand your passport on immigration to them, who will stamp out one of your pages and seal their country's official stamps. It's as simple as that. So if you want to take a trip abroad, you'll need to apply for a passport, and using it abroad is as simple as handling it through immigration whenever you arrive in a new country. For more information about the application process and where you'll be required to use your passport, keep on reading. No passports yet? If you are a U.S. citizen not to panic, such as applying for your passport is easier than you think. That's if your U.S. citizenship is fairly straightforward and you have access to various forms of identification. What do I mean by that? Well, if you can produce an American birth certificate, a file about your birth, naturalization certificate, or certificate you are good to go. You'll also need to prove your identity, which can be done with a standard-published government ID, such as a driving license. It will be a little trickier to apply for a passport, but by no means impossible. If you don't have a birth certificate for whatever reason, you'll have to spend some time gathering as much evidence of your identity as possible. For a full list of acceptable forms of identification, how to apply a birth certificate delay at your current age, and how to use a Letter of No Record to help you complete your application, take a look at our guide to obtaining a passport without a birth certificate. Need a passport in a hurry? You absolutely can get one quickly, and you absolutely don't have to pay someone else to do it for you. Take note that there are a lot of scammy services that take your money to do exactly what you can do yourself -- and will usually be right at the top of the search page's results at Google. You can even get a passport the same day you apply to rush your passport application. The government provides a simple way to check the status of your passport application online, which is especially useful if you've got a fast-approaching trip and you need to get your hands on it before leaving. The answer is a bit more complicated than it seems--We don't need a passport to drive to Mexico or Canada, for example, provide you have a PAS card or (if you live in the right state) a reinforced driver's license, or some other form of acceptable ID. Learn more about where you can visit in the article below: Travel is one of the best things possible you can do for yourself, and venturing out of your home country is an experience that can't be emulated or replaced. Travel opens your mind and challenges your perception. It exposes you to others' situations and reality, many of which are far worse than you will ever personally experience. It gets you out of your comfort zone, which helps you prove yourself that you're capable of more than you believe. You'll learn just how fortunate you are to be a U.S. citizen with an American passport, and how it's something else others would die for. In short, if you have the money and the time, there are very few investments as valid as travel. So get this passport, buy that plane ticket, and get out and explore the world.
