Aztec design represents the symbology of this ancient civilization. Most Mesoamerican cultures loved adornment. One of the ways they adorned their bodies was through tattooing. Although scholars note that Otomi, Huastec, and Mayans used permanent tattoos, they are not sure what the Aztecs did, although there are references to aztecs getting tattoos during religious ceremonies. However, if all the crops around the Aztecs tattooed, it is very likely that the Aztecs also did so. We know that Aztec warriors wore body paint before going to war, and Aztec priests wore body paint before a religious ceremony. Aztec designs and symbols are popular in today's tattoo culture. The abstract and geometric designs used in Aztec ceramics are often adapted for tattoos. Some people use specific Aztec symbols, such as the sun or a representation of an Aztec god like Quetzalcoatl, the feathered serpent god. This article explores some of the most popular Aztec-style tattoo designs. Aztec eagle honored eagles, the bird symbolizing power, courage and strength. If Aztec warriors tattooed, many would choose this one to express their bravery, power and physical strength. Aztec eagle designs usually show the eagle with its head turned left, or west and its beak open. The Aztecs had a warrior society that warriors could join when they had captured four enemy warriors. At this point, they can become knights eagles or jaguars. The two were the same in the ranking, but expressed their beliefs differently. Knights-eagles chose Huitzilopochtli as their god and the Jaguars favored Tezcatlipoca. Other popular Aztec animals for tattoos include the jaguar, monkey and frog. Sun The Aztecs, confusingly, had many gods of the sun. They believed that the world and people had been created and destroyed four times in the past. The present time is the time of the fifth sun. Each period of time was ruled by a sun god, four of whom were no longer the sun god. These were Tezcatlipoca (smoke mirror), Quetzalcoatl (feathered serpent), Tlaloc (god of rain) and Chalchiuhtlicue (goddess of water). The god of the fifth sun is Nanauatl, who became Tonatiuh. However, Huitzilopochtli, the god of war, was also sometimes considered a sun god, although this is better expressed that Huitzilopochtli is the warrior of the sun. Aztec sun tattoos are in high popularity. Calendar This Aztec drawing is taken from the face of the Sun or calendar stone. This intricately designed and carved massive stone was found near the cathedral in Mexico City. It shows the face of Tonatiuh, which represents the fifth sun. The stone shows the four suns destroyed from the past. Two jaguar heads beside the face of Tonatiuh, representing the earth. The Calendar Stone contains many symbols that speak of the Aztec founding myths. It is the most recognizable Aztec image and many favor it for an Aztec tattoo. Symbols of the Day In pictogram writing, each day had its own symbol. Many people choose an Aztec day symbol for a tattoo because they are abstract and expressive. Aztec day symbols include animals such as jaguar, eagle or crocodile; natural and everyday things such as houses or reeds and concepts such as death and movement. Aztec Warrior Many men choose the Aztec design known as Warrior, or Huitzilopochtli expressed as the warrior of the sun. These tattoo designs show an abstract and fierce male face, usually with the tongue out. A simple web search will show many examples of fine Aztec-style tattoos. Last updated on June 5, 2020 Aztec culture has been a subject of interest to scientists and history enthusiasts. This race made its home in the Mesoamerican region during the 14th to the 16th century. They were proud of their body art and used it in a similar way to the tribes of the ancient British. The stunning drawings of the Aztecs stayed long after their empire fell into the records of history. While the ancient British had tattoos for battle, pride and worship, the Tattoos of the Aztecs were made for rituals. Each city has a symbolic pattern used by its worshippers. This also extends to the placement of tattoos where the place on the body had its own ritualistic meaning. Aztec devotion to education and the arts brought intricate and fascinating designs at a time when other cultures worked in rudimentary lines and tones. Although their inks are varied in the use of styles and symbols, there are some recurring themes more used than the other. The sun, maintained with reverence and extreme importance in Aztec culture, represented the bringing of life. Another popular theme in Aztec body art is the use of animal symbols such as eagles, frogs, jaguars, monkeys and turtles. It was believed that these creatures were totems: spiritual guides that individuals chose based on their feelings toward the creature, or if they believe that their way of life is similar to the habits of the animal. For example, those who felt powerful and dominated chose bears, crocodiles or eagles as their mark. People who prefer frogs show their importance in the circle of life, even if they are not at the apex of the pecking order. The random of the monkeys or the slow nature of the turtle was also a popular choice. Are you crazy about Aztec culture and history?
