From the faded laptop, the elderly man's words bring alive the story by some who are divided by World War II, and may then be invisibly, seven decades later, once they have taken different paths. In an asylum, resident Duke reads a story of for an old woman who has senile dementia with memory loss. In the late 1930s, rich seventeen-year-old Allie Hamilton is is summer vacation in Seabrook. Local worker Noah Calhoun meets Allie at a carnival and they soon fall in love with each other. One day, Noé brings Allie to an old house that he dreams of buying and restoring and they try to make love, but are interrupted by his friend. Allie's parents do not approve of their romance, as Noah belongs to another social class, and they move to New York with her. Noah writes 365 letters (One Year) to Allie, but his mother Anne Hamilton does not deliver them to her daughter. Three years later, the United States joins World War II and Noé and his best friend Fin feed in the army, and Allie works as an army nurse. She finds wounded soldier Lon Hammond in the hospital. After the war, they find themselves again going on dates and then Lon, who is rich and handsome, proposes. Meanwhile, Noah buys and restores the old house and many people want to buy it. When Allie accidentally sees noah's photo and home in a newspaper, she feels torn between her first love and her commitment to Lon. Meanwhile, Duke stops reading to the old lady, as her children are visiting him at the nursing home.
